Proud parent of eighth grader

Letters

To the Editor:

I am very proud to be the parent of an eighth grader and a friend to many of the students in his class (the incoming freshmen).

These students have pulled together in a time of deep hurt. For many the death of their two friends Desiree and Seanna has probably been the most tragic event in their young lives.

These giving and open-hearted students have just spent an entire Saturday washing cars to raise money for the benefit funds set up by the families of Desiree and Seanna. But the giving didn't start or end with this; it has been continuous in the form of phone calls to the families, flowers and visits to the grave sites of their friends, since the tragic accident occurred. And I don't think a day passes that these kids don't think of their friends, Desiree and Seanna. And such beautiful and fond memories they have of times shared with their friends.

I'm proud to see these kids reaching out and unselfishly helping others. Diana Kornet and Susie Lean, organizers of the car wash, along with their friends gave of themselves to make a contribution to the memory of their friends, Desiree and Seanna. And have unselfishly and with caring helped to ease the pain of the Yesses and the O'Learys.

To be a parent and a friend of these kids makes me feel very proud and good inside. Their unselfish love for others and willingness to give a little extra will always be felt among the residents of Cohasset. These are the kids who will make a better world.

Leash your pets!

To the Editor:

Over the past few months we've experienced several incidents of dogs entering our yard and killing our pets. This winter our four pet ducks were killed. Today a yellow Lab murdered two of our ducklings and injured a third. These little creatures have no way of defending themselves — they were no match for the mighty Lab!

We've asked those of you whom we see with dogs on the street to please leash or confine them. Some of you have been kind enough to comply, and to you, thank you. I only ask that the rest of you follow suit. Letting dogs (hunting dogs, in particular) run loose is both unfair and illegal.

As pet owners, you can certainly identify with the anguish and heartbreak of losing a little animal you loved. I beg of you, please. Leash your dogs!

Sadly yours,
Bonnie Ford

Who's who?

To the Editor:

I appreciate your article in regards to the Pittsburgh regional planning conference, and to my attendance. However, who's the lady pictured, captioned as myself?

So many people commented to me about the picture, I feel circulation of the Mariner must have skyrocketed.

Sincerely yours,
Martha Gjesteby

(What a relief to find a bit of humor within these pages! Pardon our production error. The editor didn't see that page until it was printed last Thursday. Thanks for your lighthearted look at our mistake. The lady in the picture is Muriel Desmond, office manager of Jack Conway Realtors in Cohasset. There was an article about her on the same page. ED.)

Our disbelief

(This letter was written to the regional administrator of the EPA. Ed.)

Dear Michael:

On behalf of the Cohasset Sewer Commissioners and our exhausted residents, I express our disbelief and anger regarding your recent review determination. With this ruling, you have abdicated Region I's responsibility to ensure that the goals and the objectives of the Clean Water Act are met. In the real world, your message to Cohasset and to all towns in the Commonwealth is: Evaluate appropriate technologies in your facilities plan, but if you want any federal and state funds for construction you must build large, conventional facilities that you can afford neither to construct nor to operate.

Apparently, Cohasset and other communities are left now to seek guidance from the Massachusetts DWPC. We remind you that Region I had to file suit against the DWPC in order that this agency begin to address the Boston Harbor pollution problem which, in your words, is "the worst municipal waste water pollution problem in the U.S.!" It is the DWPC that, had it not been for the efforts of Cohasset, would have expended $30 million on a project that should cost little more than eight million dollars! It is the DWPC who responded to Cohasset's request for a grant amendment to evaluate appropriate technologies by stating that alternatives are not approvable nor fundable; then attempted to cite Cohasset for contempt and sought a $2,000/day fine from Cohasset, a $2,000/day fine for an attempt by Cohasset to identify the most cost-effective alternative, an exercise that you so correctly state, ". . .is required by the statutes and the regulations." A $2,000/day fine for complying with the law. Worst of all, $2,000/day for developing a plan to protect more of the environment (100 percent of Cohasset instead of 60 percent) better (e.g., eliminating the ocean outfall and infiltration-prone collectors pressed by DWPC) and quicker (30 months instead of 20 years).

Sewer commission protests state decision

You approve the DWPC's rationale for denial of alternative small diameter collector sewer funding. Having communicated with four regions, many states, towns and engineers throughout the country, I can assure you (short of contacting every project for confirmation) that of the 205 small diameter collection systems funded through June 30, 1984, all have a sewer service density of greater than 1.7 persons/acre! In fact, the average density is closer to eight persons/acre! Each region, state and engineer indicated that sewering areas of 1.7 persons/acre or less is demonstrably not cost-effective. Thus, your refusal to reject the DWPC's convoluted reasoning for non-funding of this alternative will cost Cohasset and many communities within the Commonwealth the benefits of the Clean Water Act, cost the federal and state taxpayers many millons more and damage our environment by discouraging use of 1/1-free collectors. Is this any way to run a railroad? Is this any way to run a federal agency charged with the solemn responsibility to spend the taxpayers' dollars most effectively to protect our environment?

You state that the DWPC's denial of appropriate on-site technology is "harmless error." I find this baffling. The DWPC's encouragement (see enclosed letter of December 10, 1979) of such alternative technologies and then its refusal to fund and approve them in 1984 constitutes a gross misallocation of public funds. How many scarce dollars have been expended on the (planning and) design of on-site systems and other alternatives which will never be approved or constructed?

Letters

Perhaps most disturbing about your review is the contrast between this state/region relationship with grantees and that found in other regions. Having talked with numerous grantees, regions and state agencies, I have found that, without exception, the regions and sta[illegible] assist the grantees and their engineers in selecting and developing the most appropriate technology for the grantee's project and then work together to secure their funding.

Cohasset sought and received express guidance from EPA Headquarters. It also studied CG-82 and CG-85; attended a three-day EPA seminar on the identification, selection, and funding of appropriate solutions for waste water problems; and sought often the advice of EPA's Cincinnati small community lab. You reward our efforts by noting that under the law these efforts were required, but you allow no funding. Is this what Congress intended when it directed EPA to ensure that only appropriate cost-effective solutions are applied to the nation's waste water problems? Is this what EPA Headquarters intended when it wrote CG-85 and advised Cohasset? Is this what the Assistant Administrator for Water intended when he submitted his September 1984 report to Mr. Ruckelshaus promising to exercise greater supervision over the states to ensure the use of appropriate technologies, specifically including alternative collectors and on-site systems?

We expected, and we were thus explicitly led to expect, more from EPA Region I. After all, this Administration has expressed time and time again the necessity for all federal agencies to tighten their purse strings and to ensure that only the most sensible, cost-effective projects be funded in any agency. Your non-decision simply abandons Cohasset and all small communities within the Commonwealth, as the many letters you received from them in support of our appeal show.

With your decision, the future is indeed bleak for affordable solutions to waste water problems in Massachusetts. Cohasset is fortunate that it has a regional solution to some of its problems (assuming DWPC at least/last approves the Hull interconnection). Other communities do not have this option. Their choice is either to build something that they can't afford or do nothing. Apparently, Congress is about to approve more funds to extend the construction grants program. You have granted increased and unwarranted discretion to the DWPC in the administration of these funds despite its dismal track record, which you yourself have criticized. By doing this, you have ensured that even more millions federal and state funds will be wasted.

Because of the grave implications of your findings, we have elected to have your decision reviewed by the Assistant Administrator for water and to concurrently commence administrative action for the design of the regionalization (Hull interconnection) aspect of our plan. In so doing, we understand that we have the support of the other small towns who have written you, as well as our representatives in Congress and the Conservation Law Foundation of New England, from whom I believe you will be hearing directly very soon.

Very truly yours,
Charles DeSantis, Chairman
For the Sewer Commission

Let parents set record straight

To the Editor:

When children have educational problems, problems their parents are unable to solve without the advice and experience of their educational leaders, they turn to those leaders for answers.

Last week we attended a school committee meeting to discuss with those leaders the continued need for small class groupings by next year's sixth grade. We were seeking the school committee's assistance in solving this problem. Deer Hill teachers supported the request for a fourth teacher, and in a letter to the school committee they said that the children's "social problems and academic weaknesses have not been resolved." We do not feel this problem is the result of mass hysteria or prophecy.

In your June 27 editorial, you chastise parents for coming to the school committee "time and again." Let's set the record straight. We have come two times in two years. The first time was in January, 1984 when we initiated a discussion of the dilemma of pupil/teacher ratios with several 'size 80' classes, including our childrens, and the inequities of assigning class ratios in a haphazard way. We asked for a policy that would ensure that other classes would not get short-changed in the future. Our motivation was the class's academic needs and the fact that they had been grouped in three classes in fourth grade while the preceding and following classes were grouped in four. Last spring the school committee voted to add a half-time fifth grade teacher on the superintendent's recommendation that this would alleviate the group's problems of "academic immaturity."

Your editorial charges that parents have long held the belief of a class 'stigma." To the contrary, the teachers and principals of the elementary schools admit that the stigma exists within the schools. This is the group that hasn't tested well, isn't working up to potential, doesn't fit the mold, needs more individual attention and so on. 'Stigma' becomes a problem that is discussed with educational leaders when it doesn't go away. We think this class is a wonderful group of children; they're creative, talented, and have ability. You can be very sure that we don't like the idea of there being a 'stigma' attahced to them.

In addition to being an active group of concerned parents, we also know that good education can be traced to definite factors, tangible or otherwise. We know that human intellect is more moved and excited by affirmatives than by negatives. We want affirmatives for our children. We want our children to be successful, productive students.

You seem to feel that we acted irresponsibly by looking to the school committee for some answers and the help we feel we need in reaching the best solution for our children. We asked, we did not demand that the school committee consider the possibility of an additional classroom teacher. We did so with the principal's knowledge and consent. We asked our educational leaders to reflect upon "meaningful, productive alternatives" to our children's dilemma. We feel we acted appropriately.

One final note about your editorial. You ask, where is the justification for class ratios of 18 students to one teacher in the sixth grade when "kindergarteners are being introdcued to school with class sizes of 27?" The class sizes for next year's kindergarten are 18, 18, 19, and 22 (one of ours had 32) as of June 28. There are presently 78 students in next year's sixth grade class; the enrollments in three classes in move-up day were 29,25, and 24. If there were four teachers in September, the classes would be 19,19,20, and 20, and there is always the possibility that enrollments will increase.

This might not be a justifiable discussion in another city or state, but it is appropriate relative to the community in which we live and our educational system.

If you had taken the time to reflect upon the plea that was made last week and talked about these matters with teachers and parents, your editorial would have been more accurate.

Why don't you make a promise that you will never again write a "flash" editorial after one meeting on a subject that is complex and concerns so many people.

We look forward to working together with the our children's teachers, principal and the school committee to discover solutions, as we did once before.

Supports EPA

(This letter was written to Henry Longest of the EPA. Ed.)

Dear Sir:

The sewer commission of Cohasset, Massachusetts will appeal a ruling by Michael Deland dated June 18, 1985. The ruling supports the decisions and actions of the Commonwealth, and rightly so. The current sewer commissioners have been uncooperative with the regulatory authority, but are supported by a cohesive group whose primary interest is "preventing undesirable growth." The minimum possible sewage treatment system is one of the means to that end. Other residents have been frightened by misrepresentation of costs of a proper system or who have only a short-term interest in this upper income bedroom town before they move on, are in favor of any tactic which does nothing as long as possible, or which provides a "solution" at least personal cost to them.

The appeal is such a delaying tactic, and it is to be hoped that it will be disposed of quickly.

The Cohasset sewage problem is not just a minor infraction of discharge quality from the overloaded small treatment plant, it is numerous failing systems and unhealthy conditions in the more densely populated and older part of town. Because of small lots and soil conditions, on-site systems can't ever be satisfactory and the only proper solution is a collection system which delivers sewage to a treatment plant.

The existing small plant is unsuitable for expansion; it is necessary therefore either to build our own or connect to a neighboring town.

(Building our own expandable plant is the correct answer both for quality of service and long term economics, but the current plan is to connect to Hull, whose plant to currently underutilized. Unfortunately, it is poorly designed and located, the town of Hull is beginning a massive condominium building boom along its extensive waterfront, and the capacity available to Cohasset is far less than could be provided at about the same cost from our own plant, after funding, and would result in water use restricitons. Although how and where the sewage is to be treated is not an issue in this appeal, it is mentioned to illustrate the combination of self delusion, cupidity, short sightedness and general incompetence that characterizes our behavior in the matter. The elected officials and their clique of supporters are, unfortunately, a large part of the problem.)

The "innovations" prepared by the current Sewer Commissioners promise to be an operational nightmare, and their "merit" is hope of a higher level of funding.

I realize that your decision must be based on the record as officially submitted. However, this letter is to urge speedy disposiion.

Neighbors protest change in drive location

Real estate developer Country Associates came under fire from a group of Cohasset residents for building an unauthorized driveway on its property at 39 Beechwood Street.

The property, formerly Harmony Hill, a summer residence for retarded children, is being converted by the developer into five condominium units.

At last week's Zoning Board of Appeals meeting (ZBA), abuttors and neighbors asserted the driveway was built to serve as an access road to a 15-acre plot of land behind 39 Beechwood, which has been acquired by the developer. According to Norman Kaufman, Country Associates spokesman, the new driveway was built to accommodate fire department specifications.

Last October, the ZBA granted the developer a special permit for the revitalization of the property. The application submitted by Country Associates for the permit included plans showing the driveway on the left hand side of the house. The ZBA received no formal request to relocate the driveway to the right hand side of the house, where it is today.

The residents of the area are concerned because a 12-foot wide path off the end of the driveway has been cut into the back woods, and some percolator tests performed. Kaufman admitted that Country Associates owns the land in back, but there are no formal plans to develop it right now. there are other access points to this plot from South Main Street, he added.

Captain Trask, fire prevention officer of the Cohasset Fire Department, testified the original driveway could not afford the aerial ladder and other fire fighting equipment the maneuverability to get behind the building, thus leaving the back without any fire fighting protection. Because of this problem, the fire department recommended the developer change the location of the driveway to the right side of the house, stated Trask.

The new landscaped driveway is more aesthetically pleasing, conceded the residents, but that is not the concern that brought them to the meeting.

Myrna Putziger, ZBA Chairman, emphasized the purpose of the hearing was to determine if there were any objections to the driveway being located on the right hand side of the house. "The concern the Board is hearing," she continued, "is not about a problem with the driveway being on the right hand side of the house, rather what is going on in the backland."

While a written decision is not expected for a week, the Board is resolved to re-emphasize a provision of the special permit that restricts use of the driveway to the owners of the condo units and their guests only. The decision will also negate the developer's right to use the path or any other extension off the driveway as access to the backland.

Board member Mark DeGiacomo noted the developer has presented the ZBA with a fait accompli. He expressed "unease about someone doing something that they weren't supposed to, then coming back to the board to ask permission."

In other business, an application made by Target Industries for a permit to make contact lenses at their Pleasant Street office was denied. The decision cited a zoning law which specifically restricts any manufacturing processes to be located in the downtown business area.

Buckle-up

The Cohasset Board of Health and the Massachusetts Department of Public Health are asking motorists to take an extra three seconds this holiday season to buckle-up on every ride. During busy holiday weekends, the risk of highway injury and death is very high. With July 4th falling on a Thursday this year, Massachusetts will have an extended weekend of high risk travel.

The Cohasset Board of Health, the Massachusetts Passenger Safety Program of the Department of Public Health, and the National Safety Council are working together in a summer-long campaign to get Massachusetts residents to "Make It Click."

"Last summer in Massachusetts, 136 motor vehicle drivers and passengers were killed and many more injured during the holiday season beginning Memorial Day and ending Labor Day," stated Dr. Joseph Godzik, Health Agent. He added, "We hope to make this summer a safer and more accident-free time."

People can decrease their chances of being injured in a car accident by 50% and of being killed in an accident 70% simply by using seat belts and child safety seats properly. "Once people start buckling up, they'll see how easy and comfortable this life-saving habit can be," stated Cindy Rogers, Director of the state's Passenger Safety Program.

The State of Massachusetts currently has a child passenger safety law requiring children under five to be secured in a car seat or seat belt. Since this law went into effect in January 1982, the number of accidental automobile injuries and deaths for the children of Massachusetts has been greatly decreased.

HEADACHE IS SELDOM SIMPLE

Did you know that there are at least four major classifications of headaches and as many as 30 subcategories among those four?

Did you know that the implications of headaches may be different among adolescents, young adults, and among people in their older years?

Many people think that "bad headaches" are always migraines, and yet they overlook the role that muscle contraction, hormonal effects, or other medical problems, that can influence or even cause headaches.

At the Behavioral Medicine Institute we feel that headache needs to be treated with respect, and often has a combination of causes. We don't know any short cuts, but we do take the time to listen. If you would like an organized and comprehensive approach to your headaches, call the BMI at 335-6283.

Seminar helps officer . . .

Although hypnotists have been utilized to startle victims into remembering certain faces and names, the possiblility of igniting some terrible recollections far outweighs any advantages, Officer Healy thinks.

"Some victims are so traumatized after the rape, they remember nothing about the incident," she continues. "They may never recall anything that happened. It's like their mind shuts out the whole experience."

The Massachusetts rape shield law, adopted in 1978, denies the inclusion of any evidence dealing with the victim's sexual past, including any previous sexual contact with the defendant. Through this law, the victim may also be compensated for any lab tests, clothing, work loss and pyschotherapy treatments occurred as a result of the rape. Although the victim may decide not to prosecute the assailant, she is entitled to compensation under the shield law.

"There doesn't have to be an arrest made, just a report filed for compensation," the officer explains.

Some other statistics include the fact that only one out of every ten rapes are reported to police. From every 100 rapes, there will be three arrests. From that three, two will be brought to superior court and there will be just one conviction.

Although it has been several years since a rape was reported in Cohasset, Officer Healy said the department has the personnel and resources to assist victims of all ages, young and old. Calls from victims will not be aired on the police scanner. Officer Healy will be available at any time to handle a call for rape victim assistance.

New activities planned for science center

Activities at the South Shore Natural Science Center, Jacobs Lane, Norwell include:

Picnic Under the Pines

Bring a picnic supper, friends and family on Tuesday, July 9, from 6:30 to 10 p.m. for a leisurely meal outside at the Science Center. As dusk approaches listen for the call of the veery and the song of the wood thrush. A slide presentation and exercises will help sharpen ears and eyes for the walk in the dark. While on the trails, listen for various owl hoots — can you tell them apart? Listen for and possibly see some other night walkers such as the raccoon, wood mouse and skunk. Crickets and fireflies will be out too.

Wendell Cerne, Biology Teacher and Naturalist, will introduce you to the sounds and sights of the night. Fee: $4 members; $5 non-members. Pre-paid registration is requested. For further information, call 659-2559.

Leisurely Strolls will be held

A special program for those who like to 'take it easy' while walking will be held Friday, July 12, from 10 a.m. to noon. This month, join a Science Center naturalist on the North Scituate Beach to explore the very interesting and delightful world of tidepools. Do you know what a limpet is?

Here's a chance to find out and then search for it among other tidepool residents such as urchins and starfish. Wear sneakers and comfortable clothes. A hand lens will be usefull Fee: $3 members; $4 non-members. Carpool from Science Center. For further information, call 659-2559.

Peace Corps honors

State Representative Mary Jeanette Murray, (R), 3rd Plymouth District joined with other state and federal officials in honoring many recent and future Peace Corps volunteers at a luncheon in the venerable Nurses' Hall at the Massachusetts State House on July 1, 1985. A gubernatorial proclamation and a joint House-Senate resolution were unveiled, declaring 1986, the 25th anniversary year of the Peace Corps, as the Year of the Peace Corps.

"Massachusetts is one of the leading sources of Peace Corps volunteers in the Nation", Rep. Murray stated. "Many from my own District have participated in the Peace Corps", she said.

In its 25 year history, the Peace Corps has been a continuous beacon of self-help and hope to its host countries. It has quietly provided a constructive outlet for many of America's idealists of all ages and has represented our nation to millions around the world as a country of caring and compassionate people.

Rep. Murray concluded, "The Commonwealth's own John F. Kennedy created the agency by executive decree, and it is only fitting that Massachusetts be the first to recognize the Peace Corps' Silver Anniversary.

Second Congregational Church

Choir — Somewhere in Ohio, a church newsletter last year announced that "following the Sunday service, our beloved Choir will disrobe for the summer." Our gratitude for the Choir's faithful musical service is especially appropriate this week. They have survived a year of some inconvenience (with the moving of Choir room) and great hilarity (last week's "Fashion Show"). Thanks, Choir!

Summer Schedule — Each Sunday in July and August, there will be two services at the church. The 8 a.m. service will usually be held outside, and will be appropriate for families with young children (though anyone is welcome, of course). The 10 a.m. services will include special music, some guest preachers, and will generally be 40 - 45 minutes in length. Following are the details:

Soloists — For the summer:

July 7 - Owen Fryling, bass

July 14 - Ruth Dalbeck, organist; Rev. Wallace Cedarleaf, guest minister; Anne Merritt, soprano

All towns, all breeds came to this show

By Elisabeth Gorfinkle

"It is just like a dog show in England in April, misty, damp and drizzly," said South Shore Kennel Club's show chairman Herbert Moran of Scituate June 28.

He wiped the moisture off his show catalogue and looked across the Hingham High School playing field between the grooming tent and the judging rings.

Owners and handlers were running through the open space with magnificent dogs shielded from the dampness by umbrellas, plastic bags or fitted clothing.

Twenty-two owners and handlers from the area participated as other participants came from other communities in Massachusetts.

The breakdown of participants included three from Weymouth, five from Norwell, two from Marshfield, two from Pembroke, three from Scituate, one from Braintree, three from Hanover, a dog handler from Cohasset and two participants from Hingham.

Moran smiled and said, "No matter the weather, the competitors came out to show their prize dogs. This is the most prestigious dog show in the east.

"The club even invited a judge from New South Wales, Australia to judge the working breeds, because we heard he was an excellent judge. Exhibitors come to shows where they like the judges.

"And this year they have come from 40 states and Canada. We have the largest entry of dogs ever, 1057, for our 41st show."

The show ran from 8 a.m. to late in the afternoon. Most of the local club members chose to work at the event.

As the day wore on, the weather improved and 125 trophies were gradually awarded to owners of various breeds. The Best of Show was given to a German Shepherd, Champion Covy Tucker Hills Manhattan handled by James Moses. Both dog and handler were seeing their 115th Best-of-Show win.

The six-year-old German Shepherd's owners Shirlee Braustein and Jane Firestone of Lyndonville, New York were given a replica of the club's Marianne Grybinski Memorial Trophy. The original is a large Paul Revere bowl inscribed with the name of this past club president, who died in the fall of 1981, and with the names of the past Best of Show winners.

The owners also received a special gift from the club in honor of Hingham's 350th anniversary year. Justine Thurston of the town's 350th Anniversary Committee presented the small, silver-plated Paul Revere bowl with the inscription, "S.S.K.C. Best in Show Hingham Ma. 1635-1985."

Nancee Greeley of Hingham, a 15-year S.S.K.C. veteran who breeds Norwegian Elkhounds and Samoyeds, explained that choosing the Best of Show is an intricate process.

The 116 breeds present at the show first compete for the best of their breed and then for the best of their group.

The groups, designated by the American Kennel Club (A.K.C.), are nonsporting (example, Dalamation), sporting (example, Golden Retriever), working (example, German Shepherd), herding (example, Sheltie), toy (example, Poodle), terriers(example, Scottish Terrier) and hounds (example, Norwegian Elkhounds).

The first-place winners of the groups compete to be the best in the show.

Greeley said the point of dog shows or field events is to keep dog breeds intact. The A.K.C. lists standards created by each national breed club. These standards are the guidelines experts use to judge whether or not a dog is a champion.

And if a person owns a champion which breeds true, (meaning close to the standard) the owner may have an investment of several thousand dollars.

Dogs are judged on their coloring, coat, bite, eyes, length of back, gait, tail, conditioning (physical ability to do a good day's work such as hunting or guarding) and proper temperament, she said.

One of the newest and most unusual breeds in the country was brought to the S.S.K.C. show by Marilyn Smith of Hudson, N.H. Smith is one of the top ten breeders of Pharaoh Hounds in the country.

Pharaoh Hounds were just recognized by the A.K.C. in January, 1984. Smith owns 14 of the 800 in the United States. Eight of her hounds are both A.K.C. champions and field champions of the American Sight Hound Field Association.

"The reason I course my dogs is the same reason I show them, for the fun of it," she said. "I'm certainly not breeding to make money. It is a very expensive hobby, but I love the unusual breed of Pharaoh Hound."

The hound she brought to the show, Merymut Achilles, is an English import who won the position of best nonchampion male of the entries in his breed.

Smith said she feels Pharaoh Hounds have the potential of becoming a very popular American breed. They are medium-sized dogs with naturally erect ears and light-colored noses and eyes. They only come in shades of red, ranging from tan to deep chestnut.

The breed, once owned by Egyptian royalty, was brought by the Phoenicians to the island of Malta 5,000 years ago. The island's farmers bred the hounds carefully, in order to create strong guard and hunting dogs.

The breed was brought to England in the earlier part of this century and to the United States in the 1970's, Smith said.

Rte. 3 construction to lead to peak access

Rte. 3 road work between Weymouth and Pembroke will not solve the problem of the South Shore commute, but it could lead to three-lane access on that leg of the trip during peak hours.

According to Lou Abruzese, Commonwealth Department of Public works, the aim of the project is to completely resurface Rte. 3 between Weymouth and Pembroke.

Traffic disruption is a major concern. Road work, which started in Weymouth last Thursday, is designed to accommodate those who commute from the South Shore to Boston, and will be contained to the southbound lanes on weekday mornings from 6 a.m. to 3:30 p.m.

Northbound work will occur weekdays from 3:30 to 6 p.m. and on Saturdays from 6 am. to 6 p.m. Work will cease Wednesday noon before the 4th of July holiday and begin again on Tuesday, July 9 to accommodate Cape weekenders.

One lane will be open at all times, but travelers should plan ahead. Abruzese noted a surprisingly large number of drivers headed south during morning work hours, the rubbernecking of curious commuters is also causing considerable tie-ups in the opposite direction.

Aug. 7 is the deadline for completion, but Abruzese is optimistic and is sure the work will be done by mid-July.

After that the ride to and from Boston will be smoother. Perhaps it will also be less congested. As the road is being re-surfaced, break-down lanes will be widened to meet federal standards for use during rush hours. Written permission must be obtained from the Federal Highway Administration before travel in the break-down lane is allowed. The DPW is currently petitioning for use of these lanes on portions of Rte. 128 as well as Rte. 3.

Scituate 10k classic set for Sunday

Patty Catalano will be the starter for the Scituate 10k Classic Sunday July 7, and will also do live cable TV commentary.

Patty is a world-class runner who recently won a marathon in Brazil.

Between races she is a fitness consultant for runners at Stone's Gym in Hanover. Patty said she is coming to this race because, "the Scituate race caters to the first time racer who is a jogger and the serious runner. It's a well organized race."

Patty's agent, Dick Gold agrees, "We want her associated with good races and Scituate caters to the runners."

The Scituate 10k Classic is known for its runner hospitality. Each runner receives a free T-shirt, runner cap, race decal, food and drink.

There are also balloons for the runner's children.

Top male and female winners receive $100 Savings Bonds and Revere Trophy Bowls. $1200 in Raffle Prizes are also given to the runnèrs.

The course record of 29:54 was set in 1984 by Bart Petracca. Mary Ries holds the female course record of 35:46.

The course is scenic, passing by the Scituate Light House and Scituate Harbor.

The race sponsors college scholarships and a youth track program and is sanctioned by the New England Athletic Congress.

An information line in Scituate is 545-2398.

Student fitness awards

Cohasset Junior High School physical education department again tested each student with the national Presidential Fitness Test. By comparing our students with national norms, parents can better evaluate their child's physical development; students can better evaluate their fitness levels and develop necessary conditioning programs, and the physical education department can evaluate its program to better serve the students.

The test measures arm strength, abdominal strength, agility, explosive power, speed and cardiovascular endurance.

Students scoring the 85th percentile or better in each area received the Presidential Fitness badge. Students scoring the 85th percentile in all but one area received the merit badge. Badges were presented to students at the Junior High Field Day.

Conway Company to distribute poison control charts

The Jack Conway Company wants parents to be able to declare this a "poison-free" July 4 for children this year.

Conway sales associates plan to bring their message to residents in the more than 32 cities and towns the real estate firm services.

Armed with some 50,000 "Emergency Poison Control Charts," the associates will knock on doors in their communities during the last two weeks in June, just prior to the Fourth of July celebration.

"We purposely planned to distribute this information before the Fourth as it is, statistically speaking, one of the major holidays when accidental poisonings of children occur," said Richard Cahill, president of the Conway Company.

The Conway emergency poison control charts will be issued to the company's 500 sales associates through its Relocation division, Cahill noted.

Conway Relocation director Michelle Kjer noted that the chart was produced by the Relo/Inter-City Relocation Service, a world-wide network of cooperating independent realtors. Relo members service some 13,000 communities in the United States and throughout the rest of the world.

The chart has been approved for accuracy by the state's poison control bureau.

"This was a crucial step for us," Cahill noted, "as the information on such charts becomes dated after about five years."

Cahill noted that the outreach program is being called "Project Salt which stands for Save A Life Today.

"The trouble is," he noted, "that when a child poisoning occurs, then there is an emergency. And if parents don't know what to do, they may take the wrong course of action — like the old adage, if you will, of adding salt to old wounds. What our chart will do is tell them the right course of action and this will greatly improve the victim's chance for survival. Studying this chart and using it in an emergency can literally let you Save A Life Today," Cahill observed.

He cautioned, however, that the first rule is to immediately call the local poison control center (1-800-682-9211), family doctor, and/or rescue/emergency help in that order. Spaces are provided in the chart for families to list their local numbers for such services, Cahill noted.

Cahill said all of the Conway associates have been advised to urge homeowners to carefully study the chart now and not wait until an emergency occurs.

"This will give them an informed jump on the correct procedures to follow when an emergency occurs," Cahill said.

Besides the door-to-door distribution of the charts, Cahill said any group may obtain numerous copies by calling any of the Conway offices in their area or by calling 826-5144 or writing to Jon Bond, Director of Advertising, Jack Conway Administration Building, 183 Columbia Road, Hanover 02339. There is no charge for the service.

Conway Company Chairman of the Board, Jack Conway, said Project "Salt" was only one of many "out-reach efforts we take to be good neighbors and return something to the community where we live and work."

Caribbean in October

Single Living Newsmagazine is sponsoring a Caribbean trip in October. The details are sketchy at this point but we'd like to hear from those of you who might be planning a fall vacation, and would like more information.
We can't tell you the exact place and date at this moment, but we can tell you we'll have fun! The zany S.L. staff will be going. There'll be laughs for sure! We plan to limit the ratio of men to women to something approaching equal. It's not a good idea to come with high hopes of meeting your dream person. You'll most likely be disappointed. On the other hand, if you come knowing you'll be with a bunch of other nice single people from the Boston area, that you'll enjoy a 1st class vacation that you deserve, your chances of having a terrific time are 100%.

Please send me more information regarding Single Living *Caribbean in October trip.

Politicus — by David A. Mittell, Jr.

Doctors versus lawyers: a hissing contest

We are about to witness what my grandfather would nearly have called a "major league hissing contest" between two of America's most prominent elites, doctors and lawyers. (In deference to your sensibilities I have substituted a glottal fricative "h" for my grandfather's quaint bilabial stop "p."

The issue around which doctors and lawyers are preparing to hiss is, of course, money. The issue around which they are going to fight about money is malpractice insurance and its increasing cost to doctors in a litigious America in which it seems every citizen has two bums - one he sits on and one who represents him in legal matters.

Seriously, for this is a serious issue - one whose outcome will reveal the sort of society we mean to be -lawsuits against doctors for malpractice have increased dramatically in the last few years, and damage awards resulting from those lawsuits have gone through the stratosphere. So, therefore, has the cost to doctors of malpractice insurance, especially to those doctors most vulnerable to dissatisfied customers such as brain surgeons and plastic surgeons. Their malpractice insurance can approach $100 thousand a year, a cost that inevitably gets paid by the consumer or by the taxpayer . . . and that is the problem.

As the cost of medical care continues to rise, the delivery of medical care gets more unequal, that is to say increasingly associated with income and social class. Insurance plans get more costly and acquire bigger "loopholes" in their coverage. The cost of Medicare and Medicaid approach the point at which a taxpayer revolt is probably in the next decade. One hears more and more horror stories of critically ill people denied treatment for want of the $25 thousand downpayment. The uninsured, still a sizeable segment of the population, do without all but emergency care.

Malpractice insurance is by no means the only factor in rising medical costs. But unlike expenditures for new hospital beds, new equipment, and medical training, the cost of malpractice insurance adds nothing productive to medicine in America. It is simply a cost that must be paid, a burden to be borne by the middle class, the poor, and the taxpayer. It is an unadulterated drain on the medical system.

Doctors, therefore, have begun to organize to lobby legislatures to set a statutory limit on what juries may award the victims of medical malpractice. Not surprisingly, lawyers are opposed to any such thing. Lawyers argue that incompetent physicians are the only reason malpractice awards are so high, they cite horrible cases, extreme but commonplace they say, of unnecessary castration, of the wrong leg being amputated, etc. They argue that to limit malpractice awards by statute would deny the victims of malpractice their fundamental right to recover for their injuries.

There is both merit and obvious self-interest on both sides of the argument, but I'm with the doctors on this one. First, the idea that a dollar value can be placed on the pain and suffering of an avoidable injury or death is false and absurd. A million dollars will not compensate for the loss of a child, the loss of a leg, or whatever it may be. The victims of such horrors should certainly be partly remunerated, and the perpetrators should certainly be punished. But I would argue that enormous awards will hinder rather than help victims in the lonely and unavoidable task of grieving loss and getting on with life. The feelings are complicated enough if you have lost a loved one or been maimed by a physician, and it seems to me that in effect making a profit on the loss that has occurred can only further complicate and prolong the resolution.

Secondly, when it comes down to a fight between lawyers and doctors, doctors, while imperfect and often arrogant, are as a profession a lot closer to true public service than lawyers. For example, the discrepancy between the medical care a poor or average citizen would receive if he suddenly fell into a coma and what Sunny Von Bulow receives, is far, far less than the discrepancy between the legal service he would receive, were he suddenly accused of attempted murder, and the legal service Claus Von Bulow has received. Lawyers who argue for gargantuan claims as a sort of civil right for the victims of medical malpractice argue primarily for the wealthy and those whose injuries are sufficiently spectacular to attract lawyers on a contingency basis. By their behavior lawyers give the lie to their "civil right" argument. In fact, nowhere is today's society more rigidly stratified than in the accessibility of legal service and the huddled masses are a lot more likely to find a good doctor than a good lawyer.

Thus, the third and decisive reason I'm with doctors on this question. It seems to me that the attacks by a relatively inaccessible legal system on a relatively accessible medical system will only have the effect of making the medical system more costly and therefore less accessible. Every time a lawyer wins a half a million dollars for a mistreated ovary or testicle, productive dollars are coming out of the medical system, dollars society pays to put back in. Whether we pay out of our pockets or through insurance or through "defensive medicine" (unnecessary treatment ordered by doctors to "cover" themselves in the event of litigation), we pay. We pay, and those who can least afford to pay pay most dearly. Thus, the rigid stratification of the legal system begins to recreate itself in the medical system.

The answer to medical malpractice is not to make us all pay more for health care, it is to make the blundering physicians pay with what is more dear to him than dollars: his license to practice. Whatever the percentage of unqualified doctors may be, we need to get them the Hell out of practice.

In that task we could use all the good lawyers around.

Building homes with a heart

Last winter members of the United Church of Christ in Norwell came to the aid of Mainspring House in Brockton, an emergency housing organization.

After a successful fund drive, they asked what could be done long-term. They were told of the critical need for affordable permanent housing.

A study group formed which discovered Habitat for Humanity. Habitat was begun in a Christian community called Koinonia Farm in rural Georgia in 1968. It established no-profit, low-interest loan plans coupled with volunteer labor which by 1983 had provided new housing for 150 families. Eventually the organization spread to Africa and Central and South America.

Jimmy Carter is a national director, and gave Habitat a boost when he received national attention while volunteering his labor for a project in Manhattan. The only habitat in Massachusetts is in Worcester, though fledgling attempts are beginning in Swampscott, Dorcester and now, Norwell.

The need is desperate. The Boston Globe recently reported over a hundred homeless families on the Cape. The Welfare Department pays an average of $39.29 a night for emergency housing in motels. That's almost $1200 a month! And with Boston area homes pricing all but the highest level of Yuppiedom out of the market, a wiser approach has to be found.

Habitat for Humanity has such an approach. Idealistic as it sounds, it has proven successful for hundreds of families.

The Norwell group stresses it only began in Norwell. It wants to be a South Shore group and is eagerly seeking members from all communities. It currently is working on becoming a nonprofit corporation.

It has a director, Larry Carlson, a publicity committee and an outreach committee, which will come to your church or civic organization to share its vision. Mark Newby is a member of the outreach committee.

"Right now we're looking for a donation of property that we can renovate or build on," he says. "In Worcester property was sold by the city government to Habitat for $1."

Once the site is selected, construction begins, using volunteers as much as possible. "The whole point is to sell a house to someone for no profit. The average Habitat house sells for $24,000. Of course, it would be more in this area. But even if it were twice as much, it would still be a great bargain."

Though nothing keeps the buyer from reselling for profit, Newby says it doesn't happen. Buyers are carefully selected and don't take advantage. Neither has a family ever been evicted from a Habitat home.

Right now the need is for people with organizing skills and community contact. Eventually they will need craft and construction people, and of course, legal and financial experts. Mark Newby invites those interested to call him during business hours at 878-1512. Though it began at the UCC Church in Norwell, it needs to expand to other churches, other communities, other kinds of groups.

Habitat accepts no government money or other state aid, though it would accept an offer of property, as it did in Worcester. This is central to the concept, and Newby believes we cannot look to the state for the ultimate answer to our housing crisis.

The Patriot Ledger ran a story on Habitat on April 16 under the headline "Norwell group to build homes for the needy." Though this is technically correct, it misrepresents the focus of the group. That is, when it comes to finding a place to live in this area, a whole lot of us come under the category of needy.

To qualify for a Habitat dwelling one must have a good dose of the work ethic, and be willing to commit to a lengthy mortgage, like any other home owner. What many of us don't realize is that a large number of the currently homeless are not shiftless newcomers. Often they are employed and skilled, but the housing situation has simply priced them out of dignity. The effect on their children, and on society will surely be devastating.

Habitat for Humanity believes that motives other than profit must effect the housing market. They have proven in other parts of the world that faith, hope and love can have an effect, too. Maybe it'll also work on the South Shore. It's certainly worth a try.

(Darrell Berger is minister of the First Parish Unitarian Church of Scituate.)

Weekend of artistry

By Charlotte Carney

It was a wonderful evening Friday at the South Shore Art Center when the center introduced works by Scott Ketchum as The President's Choice Exhibit.

The unique President's Choice Exhibit happens once a year.

According to the guidelines of the Art Center, it is an opportunity for the president of the Art Center, currently Sheldon Ripley, to choose a single artist who displays unique talent. This exclusive exhibit allows the artist to show his or her works in an atmosphere conducive to the appreciation of his particular talents.

As this year's President's Choice, Ketchum of Cohasset has been an added compliment to the Art Center's continuing quest for bringing fine art to the South Shore area.

Ketchum is an exciting young artist whose strikingly unique style and distinctive flair for color showed well, and was a welcomed treat for the patrons and invited guests who joined in the evening's festivities. As Charles "Chuck" Bush of Hingham said, "I am thoroughly enjoying the whole show."

In distinguishing contrast to Ketchum's work was the display of watercolors in the Members Gallery which had a story all their own. Most of the paintings were scenes and themes from St. Maarten.

Virginia Avery, who is well known for her work in watercolors, took her class from the Art Center on a "painting vacation," to St. Maarten last January.

"Their experience was exciting," according to Ms. Avery. "We all enjoyed it, and brought back a lot with us," she said.

The works chosen for this bi-yearly event in the Members Gallery disclosed that the "painting vacation" experience was well taught and well acknowledged.

The refreshing energetic works of Scott Ketchum, shown at the Invitational Gallery, and the sensitive interpretation rendered by artists in the Members Gallery were an added highlight to the weekend's festivities.

THE NO-COMPROMISE SOLUTION TO BUYING AN AUTOMOBILE.

When you lay out a substantial amount of money for an automobile, you should get what you want. Buying a car shouldn't be an exercise in making sacrifices.

Saab doesn't ask you to give up anything.

Superb handling and performance have made the Saab 900 one of Europe's most respected sports sedans. But that performance is delivered in return for little gas* and less fuss by a reliable two-liter engine. And unlike many other high-performance cars, the Saab is perfectly at home in the workaday world. Four adults can travel comfortably all day in a Saab, or the rear two seats can be folded flat to add extra space for cargo.

We'll be happy to tell you about a lot of other features that you won't have to give up when you buy a Saab.

Dreaded red tide hits Cohasset's shoreline

The 28 residents who dig for clams and mussels in Cohasset Harbor, will have to look to elsewhere for dinner. Red tide hit Cohasset last week.

The Cohasset Board of Health was informed Friday afternoon that all harvesting of softshelled shellfish is prohibited for human consumption. The algae which produces the paralytic shellfish poison reached the shores of Cohasset last week, according to the state Department of Environmental Quality Engineering.

Health Agent Joseph Godzik said the state informed him with a phone call last Friday that the waters were tested and produced a positive result. He expects the shellfishing ban will last at least a couple of weeks.

The last time the infamous red tide hit Cohasset Harbor was last June after a stretch of steamy temperatures and violent rainstorms. To the best of his recollection, Harbormaster Harry Ritter said the same condition, which prohibits the harvesting of all clams, mussels, and quahogs, also occurred during the summer of 1983.

"It has to do with the weather, I think, and the storms. The storms whip the algae in the water which is then consumed by the shellfish. Lobsters, crabs and scallops are not affected by the red tide," Dr. Godzik said.

According to Dan Viscardi, a se... engineer at the Lakeville office of D... not harmful to swimmers. In an interview last year with the Mariner he said, "You have to ingest a lot of sea water (while bathing) to be affected by it. But the water gets so slimy you probably wouldn't want to swim in infested areas anyways."

Eating the shellfish is another story. "You could eat one clam and die. When levels get over 300, the shellfish are very dangerous," Viscardi added.

Dr. Godzik said the state will make repeated tests of the harbor waters and contact the health board of any change.

The shellfish ban affects the 28 Cohasset residents who have been granted shellfishing licenses by the board of selectmen. The license restricts the area in which the residents are to harvest the shellfish, which includes a small stripalong Whitehead Beach.

Harbormaster Ritter said he was informed by Shellfish Constable James Curley that the red tide ban was in effect. Since that time, no one has been near the flats, he noted.

Commercial lobstering has continued as always, Ritter said, because they are not included in the harvesting ban.

There are no commercial licenses granted in

Parents complain

Attendance policy revised for Sept.

The school committee voted to amend a portion of the high school attendance policy which had been in effect the past year.

After receiving numerous complaints, the committee decided this week that parents will now have two days to submit a written excuse to the school's attendance clerk. The previous policy stated that a written note must accompany the student on the day he or she returns to school.

If the student fails to bring the note, it is deemed an unexcused absence, and the student will not be given credit for work missed. Parents had complained that because of their oversight, their child had failed to bring a written excuse to school and was academically penalized. They urged the committee to consider extending the time by at least another day.

Committee member Diana Kornet said she had personally received 45-60 phone calls from parents upset because of policy requirements, and that time restriction in particular. The policy was altered last year after members of the faculty senate complained two years ago about the previous rules, and the constant abuse of the regulations.

The portion of the policy which was changed this week now states "On the day or the second day the student returns to school, the parent/guardian must send a handwritten and signed note to the attendance clerk to state why the student's just ended absence from school was medically necessary."

There was a lot of philosophic discussion regarding the attendance policy and its various benefits and problems. Patricia Wunschel of the high school faculty senate agreed the policy has helped alleviate many problems associated with chronically truant students, but explained that many kids are being penalized for their parents' inaction to write a note explaining the absence. "We're always telling kids to be responsible for their own actions. I guess it stings a little to say these kids must also be reponsible for their parents' actions," she said.

Parent Dee DeSantis agreed with that assessment, and explained how this year she failed to send a written note with her child on the day she returned to school. The child received a zero for that day, which utlimately resulted in the child not making the honor roll that term.

Committee Chairman Joseph Nedrow said he had a similar experience when he failed to contact the school on the day his child was absent. He also noted that the policy regarding absentism and tardiness is not equally enforced by all teachers.

Member Jack Langmaid explained that the original attendance policy was written "so if the child does not get to school and the parent has not called, the child was presumed truant. The school used to call home and then everyone knew the child was not in a third place," he said.

Committee members discussed reinstating the former practice in which the high school secretary called home after a child did not reach school that day. Principal Richard Streeter explained with all her other assignments, that is no longer possible. He noted that students should share the responsibility for complying with the policy, along with their parents. "I can't buy it that it's all the parents' fault

No problem yet with Hull access

By Karen Cubie

The Hull Sewer Commission announced last week that Cohasset, Hingham, Norwell, and Abington will have only limited access to Hull's Treatment Plant.

"We have a recommendation from our engineer not to accept more than 10,000 gallons a day," said Edward Kendrick, the chief facility manager. "We set up a schedule to produce that. This has only been in effect a week so we don't know if the schedule is successful or not."

The Hull plan has limited the load it will accept to 2,000 gallons per day from each town.

"The load we accepted from them before was unlimited," Kendrick said. "I don't think it will ever be unlimited for them again in the future."

According to Hingham Sewage Commission Chairman, John Brandt, the situation is in the hands of the Board of Health.

"They should declare some sort of emergency situation to escalate the level of concern," he said. "Substantial work (pumping) may need to be done in the non-sewered schools this summer."

The Hingham Sewer Commission sent a letter to the state requesting permission to reopen the town facility for the disposal of septic waste. In addition, the Hingham Board of Health voted to write a letter to the state in support of the commission's request in their July 8 meeting.

Cohasset Sewage Commission member Ted Guild is also concerned about the problem.

"It's obviously a matter of concern," he said. "Septage is different than sewage. It's more difficult to treat. We have far more capacity for sewage. If they could get more sewage, than they could treat more septage."

According to a spokesperson from the Cohasset Health Department, there have been no complaints about the situation to date. The office has left the decision up to the septage haulers themselves as to who will haul each day. The Sewer Department septage hauled to the plant is not included in the hauls controlled by Hull.

According to Hull facility manager Edward Kendrick, Hull may offer expanded services as an option to the limited towns.

"In trying to determine whether we can take sewage from these towns we have looked into the option of building a septic handling facility away from the plant for the towns that want it," Kendrick said.

Cohasset's week . . .

Committee members

The following residents have been appointed to various town committees and boards: Linda Henderson of North Main Street, five-year term on the School Facilities Committee; Jane Goedecke of Atlantic Avenue and Arne Gjesteby of Old Pasture Road, three-year terms on the Advisory Committee; Janet Daggett of Summer Street, a three-year term on the Personnel Board.

Also, William Haynes of Surrey Drive and Geoffrey Nothnagle of Atlantic Avenue, three-year terms on the Capital Budget Committee; Jean Cotton of King Street, Chartis Langmaid of Beechwood Street, John P. Reardon Jr. of Elm Street, and John O'Donnell of Old Pasture Road, three-year terms on the Committee to Survey Structure and Functions of Town Government.

Thomas Cook of King Street, a three-year term on the Drainage Advisory Committee; Peter O'Connor of Woodland Drive, three-year term on the Design Review Board; and Cornelia O'Malley of Jerusalem Road, a three-year term on the Permanent By-Laws Committee.

Committee change

Selectmen this week approved the temporary change in chairmanship of the Watershed Protection Area Committee. Because Chairman Jeffrie Bettinger is currently working in Bintulu, Sarawak, Malaysia, he will be unable to serve as chairman of the committee for six months. His agreement was that member Thomas Cook serve as chairman during his leave of absence.

Selectmen agreed to the arrangement Monday night.

Town Hall resignation

Monday night selectmen accepted the resignation of Assistant Town Accountant Kay Conte.

After working in the Town Hall office for six years, Conte announced her resignation this week. She will be taking a job in the private sector.

Conte had worked with former Town Accountant William Signorelli in establishing a computer system for the town. After he left that office in April, Conte served as interim town accountant until Don Andrew was hired by selectmen last month.

Revenue sharing

Senator William Golden has notified selectmen that because of the fifty percent reduction in federal revenue sharing next year, Cohasset will lose a significant amount of revenue in fiscal 1987.

According to Golden, who received the figures from the Massachusetts Municipal Association, "the loss of revenue to the Town of Cohasset as a result of the termination of revenue sharing is estimated to be $94,174."

Golden said he was forwarding the information "for the board's use in planning present and future local expenditures."

Support of police

Charles and Lois Butman of Spring Street have urged selectmen to support a wage increase for the police department.

In a letter addressed to the Board of Selectmen, the Butman's stated they "resent the sum of $30,025 having spent so foolishly concerning the fact, that you, the selectmen, have not met directly with the Cohasset Police Department for the past 20 months."

The Butmans noted that the police "protect the lives and property of the citizens of the town."

The couple added that selectmen should endorse a "fair salary and the retaining of benefits" for the union.

The police union representatives and the personnel board are scheduled to meet in a fourth fact-finding session July 24 in Boston. A labor arbitrator will preside at the meeting.

Despite a letter circulated during the June special town meeting, the union has not met with the Board of Selectmen. The union composed an open letter to the town, requesting their support of a negotiation session between the police and selectmen.

Stephan Vanderweil knows digging at the beach is one of the most fun things you can do in the summer. He's also smart enough to know not to eat anything that comes off that shovel — especially during our red tide ban. (Carol McCann photo)

Fire chief group discuss selection process

Applications for the post of chief of the Cohasset Fire Department are in demand from as far away as Kalamazoo, Michigan. However, the Board of Selectmen here are unable to approve a selection process that would produce the best candidates for the job.

The Fire Search Committee, appointed by the selectmen, is attempting to come up with a suitable recommendation. At last week's board meeting, Stephen W. Bobo, spokesman for the committee, proposed an examination, prepared and administered by the Fire Service Instructors (FSI), as the best available method of screening applicants for the position.

The examination includes multiple choice questions and three site tests, said Bobo. The Fire Search Committee has communicated to the FSI the job description of the post, as determined by the board. Therefore, responses to the test questions can be evaluated from the town's prospective.

The site tests would involve bringing the candidates to three structures in the town, and asking them to put out a hypothetical fire under certain circumstances, detailed Bobo.

The board will be able to choose from three examinations prepared by the FSI, especially for Cohasset. The cost of preparation, administration and correction of the tests is just under $1,000, said Bobo.

The selectmen took under consideration the recommendation put forth by Bobo on behalf of his committee, and indicated a decision will be reached by their next meeting in two weeks. A favorable aspect of the proposal is that the test is tailored to Cohasset, noted Selectman Frank W. England.

The current Fire Chief, Martin Dooley, is under a contract that has not been renewed and expires at the end of this year. Dooley said he has been considered for a new post heading up a fire department out in California.

One major problem with the whole process of finding a new chief is eliminating the bias against hiring a local firefighter, said Bobo. He told the board if he fails there is no guarantee he can go back to his former position. Therefore, the risk involved in filling the shoes of the town's fire chief appeals only to outsiders, he said.

Selectman Clifford Mitman said the remedy to the problem does not lie in giving a local man an unfair advantage over outsiders by guaranteeing a lesser job should he fail as the fire chief.

The Fire Search Committee is concentrating its hiring efforts by placing advertisements in the Boston Globe and the Patriot Ledger, said Bobo.

In other business, the selectmen will try to put an end to the parking problems that have plagued the residents who live near the town pool. Signs will be posted at the facility requesting swimmers to use the Sohier Street parking lot.

At present, the parking situation there has been confused by signs posted at the entrance of the lot that say "Do Not Enter" and "Fire Lane Emergency Vehicles Only." Swimmers have been seeking an alternative parking area, and have found it on a field adjacent to the pool entrance that is normally used for Little League parking overflow in the spring and summer.

Swimmers gain access to the field via the graveled driveway belonging to the town pool, which has an entrance on North Main Street. Residents of the area on North Main have become bothered by the traffic congestion the new-found parking lot has created.

The selectmen and the pool authorities will educate the pool membership to use the lower parking lot. New signs will be posted at the facility directing them to the lower parking lot and pool staff shall inform those who regularly park in the field to park below.

The driveway entering off of North Main will be utilized by handicapped swimmers only. The field, which has been used as a parking area for Little League fans since 1954, will be limited to that function only.

The Cohasset Baptist Church will be allowed to conduct Sunday services in the Town Hall for $15 a day and the cost of custodial fees. England cited a town law that requires the charges to any organization wanting to rent out the Town Hall. The selectmen are looking for someone to perform the custodial duties before and after the services.

The Milliken Field Committee has been selected. The Committee is responsible for finding an architect for the job of redoing the High School athletic field.

Appointed to the committee are Peter Laugelle, Clark Chatterton, Charles Desantis, Terry Duggan, Kenneth Ekberg and building inspector Edward Poskus.

The Harbor Committee recommended the board direct the Harbormaster to distribute required decals only to those boat owners who have paid mooring fees and excise taxes. Only 10 percent of Massachusetts boat owners pay the tax and all levels of government within the state are seeking a method that would put an end to this flagrant and widespread abuse. The board, in conjunction with the Police Chief, will conduct a survey assessing the parking areas and volume at Hugo's and the Music Circus. Chief Joseph M. Kealey will be cracking down on the illegal parking on Rte. 3A by the Autohaus, he said at last night's meeting.

The Towing Bid for the town was awarded to Schiavo Brothers and Mitchell's Repair. The Alltown Oil Company was awarded the bid to provide the town with No. 2 fuel oil.

The Board of Selectmen will meet again in two weeks at the Town Hall.

Sewer board to respond to WPC queries

The sewer commission is in the process of replying to the outstanding questions the state Division of Water Pollution Control has regarding Cohasset's waste-water management plant.

Although the state Environmental Protection Agency (EPA) recently denied funding of the major portion of the supplementary facilities plan, the regional administrator said the state had ten days to outline its major questions and concerns regarding the Cohasset plan. The sewer commission has ten days after the receipt of the WPC letter (dated July 28) to prepare written answers to the EPA.

At the sewer commission's urging, selectmen recently approved spending up to $1600 to appeal the state EPA's rejection to the federal agency.

It is expected to take at least several months before the Washington, D.C. headquarters issues a ruling on the Cohasset appeal.

One of the major concerns expressed by WPC Chief Engineer Paul Taurasi is the recently-enacted reduced capacity of the Hull treatment plant. The engineer wants to know how this reduction will affect the proposed Cohasset-Hull interconnection. "Please outline for the Division the status of your discussions with Hull, particularly those including your intermunicipal agreement with a schedule for sewage disposal," he stated.

According to the state WPC, the Cohasset plan never presented a cost-effective analysis in accordance with EPA deadlines. Taurasi stated, "in order to properly evaluate these different sewering modes, a detailed sample cost analysis must be performed on random streets in the community."

He continued, "we fail to see why (alternative sewers) were shown to be cost effective in Cohasset but more expensive in comparable areas within the Commonwealth. Our experience here is that alternative sewers may be cost effective in less densely populated areas."

Regarding the on-site rehabilitation program, Taurasi stated that cost is not the major consideration, "but whether the alternative is approvable from technical and environmental as well as cost standpoints. Your decisions have been based solely on costs and erroneously-assumed federal state grant contributions. Specifically, we have yet to be shown in detail of why many areas were eliminated from future sewering and will remain with on-site systems... please show examples of how acceptable subsurface disposal system can be constructed in these same conditions which will be a long-term solution. Again, such examples should be in all areas of the town. Please note that other facilities plans have shown such examples."

The state WPC had several criticisms of Cohasset's proposed on-site rehabilitation plan. Taurasi noted, "as indicated in past correspondence, several of your proposed rehabilitation techniques are unacceptable. It is still difficult to understand why the report in one section recommends standards more stringent than Title 5 for new construction in order to provide adequate environmental protection while concurrently advocating major Title 5 variances for existing areas. This appears to be a contradiction.

"The report never explains how certain difficult areas, such as Jerusalem Road, Little Harbor and the M and E Phase two area, for example, are to be rehabilitated. When developing the rehabilitation

Basketball tourney

The school committee gave its tenative approval for the high school basketball team to participate in a December tournament held in Virginia.

The high school administration must first receive a waiver from the Massachusetts Interscholastic Athletic Association (MIAA) to travel outside the 700-mile limit. Once that is accomplished, the Boosters Club must notify the committee that all students will be fiancially able to attend the tournament, and that all team members will make the trip. Club members promised the committee Monday night that there will be five adult chaperones to supervise the 15-member team.

Coach Eddie Minelli explained that the team, the past year's state divisional champions, were invited to participate in several national tournaments next year. He selected the Richmond, Va. event, which has been described as the classiest tournment in the country, he said. The event will take place December 27 - 30.

Costs for traveling to and from the tournament will be borne by the individual student, with accomodations at a local motel paid for by the tournament organizers, he explained. All team members will attend the event, Minelli said.

Although the student will play three games against nationally-ranked teams, Minelli viewed the trip as an educational experience, not simply an athletic competition. He also noted this will be the first and last chance for many players to participate in a national tournament.

Minelli said the team would probably travel by bus, which costs less than flying. And he suggested that they stop off in Washington, D.C. to view the sites there.

Although the committee expressed concern that all students be eligible to attend, Shirley Watters of the Boosters Club said that will be taken care of by that organization. She also assured the committee there would be the required number of adult chaperones to accompany the team.

Study committee

Reacting to the concern of member Richard Conley, the school committee voted Monday night to form a sub committee to study a wide range of issues dealing with athletic team regulations and a drug and alcohol policy.

Two weeks ago, Conley expressed his concern that senior athletes can be cut from a varsity athletic team. He opposed such action. At that time he also proposed a strict anti-drug and alcohol policy aimed at all students, and athletes in particular.

After discussing the issue with Athletic Director Clark Chatterton, Conley said a sub committee should be formed to study the issues. "We (the school system) is growing smaller all the time. We are not going to be competitive in the next three or four years. We must look at where we're going," he told the committee. He noted the sub committee must devise a future plan for school athletics, taking into consideration a declining school enrollment.

Conley said the sub committee would review all athletic team procedures and rules. And if his concern about senior team members is not adopted, "so be it," he told the committee.

Among the members of the sub committee will be Conley, Chatterton, CHS Principal Richard Streeter and Boosters Club representative Shirley Watters.

Two weeks ago, Watters expressed opposition to imposing a senior non-cut clause into the athletic policy. It's up to the individual coach to field the best team, she said, and if that team does not include a veteran senior player, that is the coach's decision to make.

In addition, Watters stated it is imperative that guidelines be established regarding student use of drugs and alcohol.

Leary represents CHS

John Leary, Director of Guidance at Cohasset High School, represented the school at the 14th annual meeting of the New England Association of College Admissions Counselors on May 28 through May 30. Approximately 600 high school guidance counselors and college admissions representatives attended the meeting at Smith College in Northampton.

A wide range of panels and workshops were offered covering the college admissions and financial aid process. Dr. Peter D. Relic, Superintendent of Schools in West Hartford, CN, was the keynote speaker.

The New England Association of College Admissions Counselors is a non-profit association of colleges, universities and secondary schools in New England. Its purpose is to improve relations and communications between high schools and colleges.

The Law and You

FALSE IMPRISONMENT

Most of us think that "false imprisonment" refers to arrest and incarceration brought about by action of the police or other public officials. This notion is incorrect. This tort actually encompasses a much larger area. For instance, if a man locks his wife in her bedroom so that she cannot escape after a violent argument, this act constitutes a false imprisonment. Although he may not have threatened her in any way, nor touched her, he intentionally and without justification confined his wife to her room without her consent. If there is no way of escape which is both safe and readily apparent to her, these are elements of the tort of false imprisonment.

Chiropractic for HEALTH

by Dr. Kevin M. Neill, Chiropractic Physician

THE SENIOR SET

Chiropractic care is especially important for seniors. As one ages, the muscles which maintain normal alignment of the spine lose their tone. The vertebrae tend to become misaligned, affecting the spinal nerves which lead to the major organs, joints and tissues of the body. Serious problems such as arthritis, hypertension, constipation and other digestive disorders may result from nerve interference. Chiropractic health care is gaining popularity among older adults. It is painless, both corrective and preventive, and is reasonably-priced. Regular chiropractic adjustments can insure an uninterrupted nerve supply to keep every part of the body functioning at its optimal level for the longest possible time. It can make youthfulness a question of vibrant health rather than a question of one's physical age.

For the attainment of the lifestyle and healthstyle you seek, we invite you to call and learn more about how chiropractic can help you. From addressing existing problems to serving as a preventive approach, chiropractic exams can serve to allow Mother Nature to utilize her natural means in helping one enjoy the healthstyle they seek. Whatever the age, from young to young at heart, call the COHASSET CHIROPRACTIC OFFICE, 760 Chief Justice Cushing Hwy., Suite 12, and learn more about the benefits of chiropractic. Tel. 383-1211, 1214. Alternatives discussion

Committee member Barbara Bliss said she would like to continue discussing ways in which the students of the incoming sixth grade class could be helped next year.

The committee needs specific alternatives, she stated, beside the parents' recommendation of a fourth classroom teacher. Bliss suggested teachers, administrators and parents consider how the class would work with four, three and a half, or three classroom teachers, or a good teacher aide to assist in the three rooms. "Evaluate the best proceedings and see what we can do for this class. But we need specific alternatives," she stated.

Two weeks ago, sixty parents of the incoming sixth graders requested the committee assign a fourth classroom teacher for these students. The class, they said, had an educational history which indicated they falter in large classes, and less individualized attention.

The committee said at that time, they would study the situation, but could make no committment of an additional classroom teacher until the budget is carefully reviewed, and class sizes are more precisely estimated for next year.

But in the meantime, Bliss said the parents, administrators and teachers could be reviewing alternatives to the fourth classroom teacher. She asked that the school history of this class be studied, with a comprehensive report of their testing levels, not simply a mean average

Karin Bartow of Sohier Street presented the committee with four letters from Deer Hill faculty members which she said, "shed more light on the problem and in finding the best alternative."

Although Chairman Joseph Nedrow opposed reading the letters publically because the correspondence had not been received through the committee's normal channels, Bartow submitted them for the members' review.

Committee member Jack Langmaid suggested that all material to be studied by this group of teachers and parents should be provided to the school committee in writing.

Member Diana Kornet noted that the parents' study committee should device "a whole group of alternatives" to a fourth teacher, so the school committee would be able to discuss a wide range of possibilities.

Summer reading

After some discussion, the school committee decided Monday night to retain a summer reading list for senior high school students, with a two-book reading requirement.

The committee was concerned because the list had been sent home in June with most students, although many did not know that there was a requirement to read two books. The English Department teachers intended to grade the students on either a quiz or written or oral report on the two books.

The committee expressed concern two weeks ago that many students didn't realize there was a reading requirement for the summer, and worried they would be penalized. Member Richard Conley said he talked with three students who had never seen a reading list, and knew nothing of a reading requirement.

Although the committee favored the concept of

Move against discrimination

Norfolk District Attorney William D. Delahunt and Alex Rodriguez, Chairman of the Massachusetts Commission Against Discrimination, announced the signing of a Memorandum of Agreement between their two agencies for a joint campaign against discrimination.

Under the Agreement, the District Attorney's Office will provide legal representation to the state agency in selected discrimination cases in Norfolk County. MCAD Commissioners Frederick A. Hurst and Kathleen Allen joined Delahunt and Rodriguez in signing the Agreement.

The Agreement marks the start of a joint program by the District Attorney and the MCAD to enforce state laws against discrimination. Various Massachusetts laws now prohibit "discrimination because of race, color, religious creed, national origin, physical or mental disability, or status with respect to public assistance."

Under the terms of the Agreement, the MCAD will promptly refer to the District Attorney any evidence or complaints that it receives concerning possible criminal violations of civil rights law in Norfolk County. The District Attorney's Civil Rights Division, headed by Assistant District Attorney Charles J. Hely, will promptly investigate and bring criminal prosecutions when appropriate.

Under the Agreement, civil rights suits for equal housing and employment opportunities may be brought jointly by the two agencies against employers, landlords, real estate brokers and municipalities. The District Attorney and the MCAD had also pledged to assist each other in joint investigations into discriminatory practices in Norfolk County.

WPC lists problems with sewer plan

examples requested above, make sure that these areas are adequately represented and dealt with."

The engineer also singled out the Board of Health's concern with the long-term acceptability of many on-site repairs. "As its letter of February 13, 1985 clearly indicated the Board is not opposed to rehabilitation which is long-term and will protect the public health, but still has major problems with the particulars of the proposed Cohasset program. Please provide documentation that the Board of Health has been consulted and is in basic concurrence with the rehabilitation program that we have requested you to provide for our review."

He also noted that the concerns of the water commissioners remain to be addressed, and that rehabilitation in some difficult areas would increase costs significantly.

Regarding the alternative sewers, Taurasi stated there are still questions on the cost-effectiveness, and that the state will not fund sewers with "dips, sags, rises, flat or reverse slopes and curved sections."

The state questions construction in the tree-belt area of town, and whether alternative sewers can be constructed at the shallow depth referenced in Cohasset's report.

Taurasi said the Cohasset report continues to use incorrect funding assumptions. He noted the correct funding is 90 percent state/federal grant for Hull connection; 50 percent grant for collector sewers and zero percent for on-site rehabilitation due to low priority.

The state engineer outlined concerns regarding the built-in growth factors which may lead, he said, to excess capacity. That is ineligible according to EPA guidelines on reserve capacity. Eligibility, Taurasi continued, for wastewater facilities will be limited to "existing needs", that is, flows from sewers either in place or to be constructed concurrently with this project, or else from sewers in need areas which the town certified will constructed prior to October 1, 1990.

The Division continued to take the position that an upgrading/expansion of the existing treatment plant with or without an outfall is unapprovable. According to Taurasi, the town has submitted no substantive documentation to support its claim that such an alternative is acceptable.

Regarding the water supply, Taurasi stated that Cohasset must show the location of the public wells and the 20 establishments on private water. The town must also show the extent of the public water supply watershed, including the recharge area of the public wells. "For the protection of public water supplied, DEQE is developing more stringent guidelines relative to the distance of sewerage facilities from public water supply wells," he stated.

FLYING SCOT RACE SERIES

Saturday, the Flying Scots raced under a strong westerly wind which proved to be quite a challenge for all the skippers.

In the end, Ray Kasperowicz, along with his crew, Bob Davenport and Tad Kasperowicz, came out on top, followed closely behind by skipper Steve Bartow and his crew, Julie Hoogeveen. Bob Smith came in third place and Peter Chapman was fourth for the day.

The Scots were off and racing again Sunday. In this makeup race the wind was not blowing as hard as it had on Saturday, but the skippers still had their work cut out for them.

Here's some true Olympic form as Sara Corbett practices with the swim team at the Cohasset Town Pool.

☐Former School Committee member Martha K. Gjesteby was recently feted at a surprise luncheon in her honor at Susanne's Ocean Inn in Scituate. Numerous friends gathered to thank her for her six years of service as a member of the Cohasset School Committee.

Mrs. Edward Guild delivered the toast. Mrs. John Doherty delivered an original poem in Martha's honor. Laura, who was recently run over by a bus, said she wrote the poem while in traction.

The group presented Martha with a lovely glass-blown sculpture.

☐Koren A. Lipsett, daughter of Valerie Lipsett of 85 Elm Street, graduated recently from Skidmore College in Saratoga Springs, New York, and is now on a fellowship at the University of Maryland, working toward her doctorate in Chemistry. Koren graduated with College Honors and honors in her major. She was elected to Skidmore's honor society in her junior year and received the American Institute of Chemists Award upon graduation. Koren graduated from Cohasset High School in 1981.

☐ Congratulations to Stephen Daniels, son of Mr. and Mrs. Edwin E. Daniels of 112 Beach Street, who recently was graduated from Berklee College of Music in Boston. He received his Bachelor of Music degree in Music Education, and certification in the public schools. After the graduation ceremony the family attended a reception at Berklee and a dinner celebration at the Westin Hotel. Stephen is currently employed at Thomson and Thomson in Quincy, as a customer service sales representative.

☐ What a game it was, with more screaming and yelling than there has been all year . . . it could be called an upset, or another "impossible dream," but the Dodgers won the pennant! Behind the solid pitching of Paul Ford, it seemed that they could do no wrong, even with the Braves giving it their all! Congratulations to both teams, as each had an outstanding season.

☐ Mike Gill, head of the swim center, has a grand plan for families next Sunday (July 14). From noon to 3 p.m. there is going to be a "family splash," full of fun and games, and open to all Cohasset residents. There will be some light refreshments served, but why not pack a picnic lunch and make a day of it! It's certain that a good time will be had by all, don't miss out on the fun. Remember, you don't have to be a member for you and the family to attend.

☐ Congratulations to Sarah Abruzzese of 90 Old Pasture Road, who graduated from Curry College with a B.A. in Biology.

☐ Heard through the grapevine that Abigail (Davis) and Paul Plante had a dynamite trip to Aruba . . . who wouldn't have a wonderful honeymoon with that being the destination, right? The happy couple are now residents of Lawrence, Mass. and we wish them every happiness.

☐ Where did you watch the fireworks from? That was the question last week, after Hingham put on the gala display in honor of their birthday/anniversary. The parade sure was a long one, the floats were a sight to behold . . . saw Mr. and Mrs. Gates in their antique car, which has been in the parades for a good many years. The fireworks found everyone in their own "strategic location" as to avoid the traffic jam. A fun day was had by all.

☐ Saw Paul Farren running and working out . . . a large man indeed! He should be headed to football soon, have a grand season, Paul.

☐ That's the news from here . . . keep it coming, as your news should be plentiful at this time of the year!

Wellfield study

The Watershed Protection Area Committee intends to call a meeting sometime this month to discuss the water commission's intent to maintain a wellfield on Sohier Street.

The meeting will include selectmen, the water commission and Camp, Dresser and McKee, the committee's consultant. The concern regards the water commission's insistance in maintaining two unused wellfields for emergency backup.

The watershed committee has repeatedly stated its concern that "the required regulatory impact of preserving this minor source may jeopardize the entire watershed protection plan." According to that committee, the Sohier Street well, which is currently unused, contains a large area of influence in which a number of underground gasoline storage tanks are located. It also includes the largest portion of the business and light industrially zoned areas to be included in the proposed protection district.

The water commission is adamant about retaining the wellfield in the event the Lily Pond station was ever shutdown because of accidental contamination. The Sohier Street well could be used as a backup in such an emergency, supplying 300,000 gallons per day in combination with another well in Elm Meadows.

The watershed committee said a combined meeting will be held sometime this month, despite the water commission's intention to retain the Sohier Street well.

A good choice

We've said this before, and will likely say it some more. This town has a tendency to be "committee'd out." Whenever there is a job to do, a selection to make, we choose a sub study advisory committee to do the leg work and report back.

It can be a tedious task with long hours of toil for no monetary reward and little satisfaction. To those people who have come forth among the masses to be part of the unheralded few, we give you our thanks.

Without you, we would never have studied in such depth our need for a town garage, a town hall, the town's EMT service, a landfill alternative , etc. etc. As you read over this simplified list, you will also notice that often these committees, despite long, hard hours of work, reach a consensus that is often not supported theoretically or financially.

There is a new study group in town, and we hope much attention is paid to them. It is warranted.

The fire chief search committee was meticulously selected a few weeks ago by the board of selectmen. They took pains to choose the right people for this study group, and we applaud their choice.

The six men who sit on this committee are experts in the field of firefighting. They know what makes a good chief, and are well aware of the type of personality needed to be chief in Cohasset.

Even a member of the Cohasset Fire Department recently commented on the great choices selectmen made in gathering members for this committee.

They will be meticulous in their search which will conclude with a list of five finalists in October. They have a clear agenda before them. Thus far, if anything has needed clarification, they have immediately returned to selectmen for guidance. This is not a shy group of men. They know their business, and have every hope of pursuing the objective to its conclusion.

There is no concern that these men, all former or present firefighters, will bow to political pressure. They would surely not stand for such interference. Give them the room, the tools, and the time, and they will likely find us a superior candidate for chief.

Discussions have begun on whether a local candidate should have preference over all others. This is something we will address in future editorials as the committee progresses in its assignment.

Red Tide alert

As of July 5, Cohasset is closed for shellfish harvesting because of "red tide."

All coastal areas where shellfish can be harvested are closed until further notice. This notification was received today from the Shellfish Division of the Department of Environmental Quality Engineering. This is total ban on shellfish harvesting in that 'red tide' can cause serious illness in humans.

No shellfish should be consumed if they originate in Cohasset until the ban is lifted.

McNabb contacts A.G. Bellotti

(This letter was sent to Attorney General Francis Bellotti. Ed.)

Dear Attorney General Bellotti:

Pursuant to the provisions of Massachusetts General Laws, chapter 39, sections 23A and 23B, commonly known as the Open Meeting Law, I hereby make this complaint that the Cohasset Board of Selectmen violated that law at an executive session of the Board held on May 4, 1985.

Pursuant to your enforcement authority under the general laws of the Commonwealth of Massachusetts, I hereby request: (1) that your office make an official ruling whether this meeting has been held in violation or in compliance with MGL, c. 39, s. 23A, 23B, and (2) that your office take appropriate enforcement action concerning this violation to deter any future violation by this Board.

Please be advised that the Board of Selectmen of the Town of Cohasset are already under court order to obey the provisions of MGL c. 39, s. 23A, 23B. On September 14, 1984, in the case of William J. Protulis et al, vs. Mary Jane McArthur et al., Norfolk County Superior Court, Civil, Docket #141358, they were ordered to "strictly comply with the provisions of G.L. c. 39, s. 23B in all future meetings."

At the meeting of the Board of Selectmen held Saturday morning, May 4, the Board voted to go into executive session to discuss "contract negotiations and litigation." Contract negotiations is not one of the reasons under MGLc. 39, s. 23B for conducting an executive session. The minutes do not show that any matter relating to litigation was discussed, rather that they discussed the professional qualifications of candidates for executive secretary and town accountant, and the new proposal, which they adopted, to combine those two positions. Those are matters which properly, and legally, should be discussed in open session.

Enclosed please find (1) a completed complaint/inquiry form for open meeting complaints, concerning the May 4 meeting, (2) my letter dated May 21 to Norfolk County District Attorney William Delahunt, received on May 23, which complained of the violation and included (a) minutes of the May 4 meeting, (b) letter from Selectmen on May 9 to Mr. Don Andrew, and (c) newspaper articles concerning the meeting, and (3) my second letter to Delahunt, dated June 10 and received June 11, concerning the court order, and including (a) copy of the court order, (b) newspaper article concerning the order, and (c) minutes of May 6 open meeting of the board.

Despite those two letters to Mr. Delahunt, the Norfolk County District Attorney's office has taken no action concerning my complaint. Except for one phone call which I initiated to Asst. DA Charles Healy, who said that he could not tell me when they would be able to get around to it, there has been no communication or action by the DA's office with myself or the Cohasset Town Counsel's office. As of this date, the Norfolk County District Attorney's office has had my original letter for a total of almost six weeks, and has taken absolutely no action.

Compliance with the Open Meeting Law by public officials is important to ensure that the public has the right to know what their officials are doing in their name, to ensure that the public knows how their tax dollars are spent, and to protect the right of voters to participate in the process of government. The proper enforcement of this law is necessary to encourage compliance. Since the District Attorney's office has declined to act, I ask that your office take the necessary action to resolve my complaint.

Thank you for your attention. I look forward to hearing from your office concerning my complaint.

Sincerely,
John K. McNabb, Jr.

P.S. Please be advised that I am taking this action as a private citizen and not in my capacity as Chairman of the Committee to Survey the Structure and Functions of Town Government.

Letters

Love and thanks

Letter to a Town That Cares — Cohasset:

A recent conversation with my husband, Gene, has prompted me to share a few thoughts with all our friends in Cohasset.

I am recovering nicely from my recent surgery and happened to mention how important a role Cohasset and the children and parents of mine at the Joseph Osgood have played in my progress. Upon discussing it further, I reflected, thought a minute and said, "You know, I don't think a day has gone by since I went into the hospital that I haven't received a visit, card, gift or telephone call from someone in town wishing me well. I can't believe how thoughtful and caring the townspeople have been." Gene then chimed in with the fact that every person in town before saying "Hello" or "Good Morning," has said, "How's your wife? Tell her we send our love" or "We are praying for her," and other very meaningful words of true concern.

This recent instance has focused for me and put into perspective just how important the relationship we have with our neighbors and friends is in our everyday life. It further crystalized how fortunate we are to literally have each other here in Cohasset.

Much love and thanks to the caring people in Cohasset and especially to the teachers, children and parents at the Joseph Osgood School.

Last, but not least, my love and thanks to my husband Gene and sons, "J.T." and "E.T." for all their love, concern and help.

Sincerely,
Marie C. Price

Remembering the 125th anniversary of Minot's Ledge

By David Wadsworth
Historical Society Curator

A familiar and friendly sight to South Shore sailors and landsmen alike, historic Minot's Ledge Lighthouse, is celebrating its 125th birthday this year.

The impressive 114 foot granite tower, located two miles seaward of Cohasset Harbor on Outer Minot's Ledge, was constructed during the years 1855 to 1860 by a work crew made up mostly of Cohasset seafarers and craftsmen under the leadership of Colonel Barton S. Alexander of the U.S. Army Corps of Engineers.

Minot's Ledge has withstood the worst assaults of wind and wave, of hurricane and northeaster, and today is one of the world's best known and most frequently pictured ocean lighthouses.

Its location, Outer Minot's Ledge, is one of a large group of sea ledges and small islands extending offshore from Hull, past Cohasset, and toward Scituate, collectively called the "Cohasset Rocks." These small outcrops of granite, some seldom seen above the water, frequently are swept by ocean storms.

For two centuries, they formed a graveyard for ocean-going sailing vessels caught in the violent northeast storms so often seen during New England's winter months. Outer Minot's Ledge itself is a low-lying rock, barely awash at the lowest of tides, and measuring only thirty feet indiameter.It was at this site that the U.S. Lighthouse Establishment decided to build a light, and for 87 years it boasted of continuous habitation by a human population of at least two, sometimes more. All were keepers of Minot's Light.

The granite tower was a manned lighthouse from 1860 to 1947, when the lantern was made automatic and the keepers could end their lonely vigil for good. The Lighthouse keepers of Minot's Ledge actually took up residence above the ocean a decade earlier than 1860, for the present tower is the second at that site. A previous structure, an eight-legged, spider-like tower called an "Iron Pile" lighthouse, had been completed in late 1849 and was lit for the first time on January 1, 1850. The first Minot Ledge Light was doomed to an early extinction, as events were soon to show, with tragic consequences to its heroic keepers.

The first head keeper at Minot's Ledge was veteran Isaac Dunham. It was he who lit the lantern for the first time in 1850. Dunham served through the first storms to hit Minot's and he felt the new structure twist and sway in a frightening manner. After numerous complaints to the government about the tower's questionably safe condition, Keeper Dunham resigned his post on October 7, 1850. He had lived in growing fear that the new lighthouse would soon collapse, unable to take the strain of the winds and waves which swept the ledge upon which it stood.

Dunham's successor was Capt. John Bennett. Captain Bennett also was the last keeper of the first Minot's.

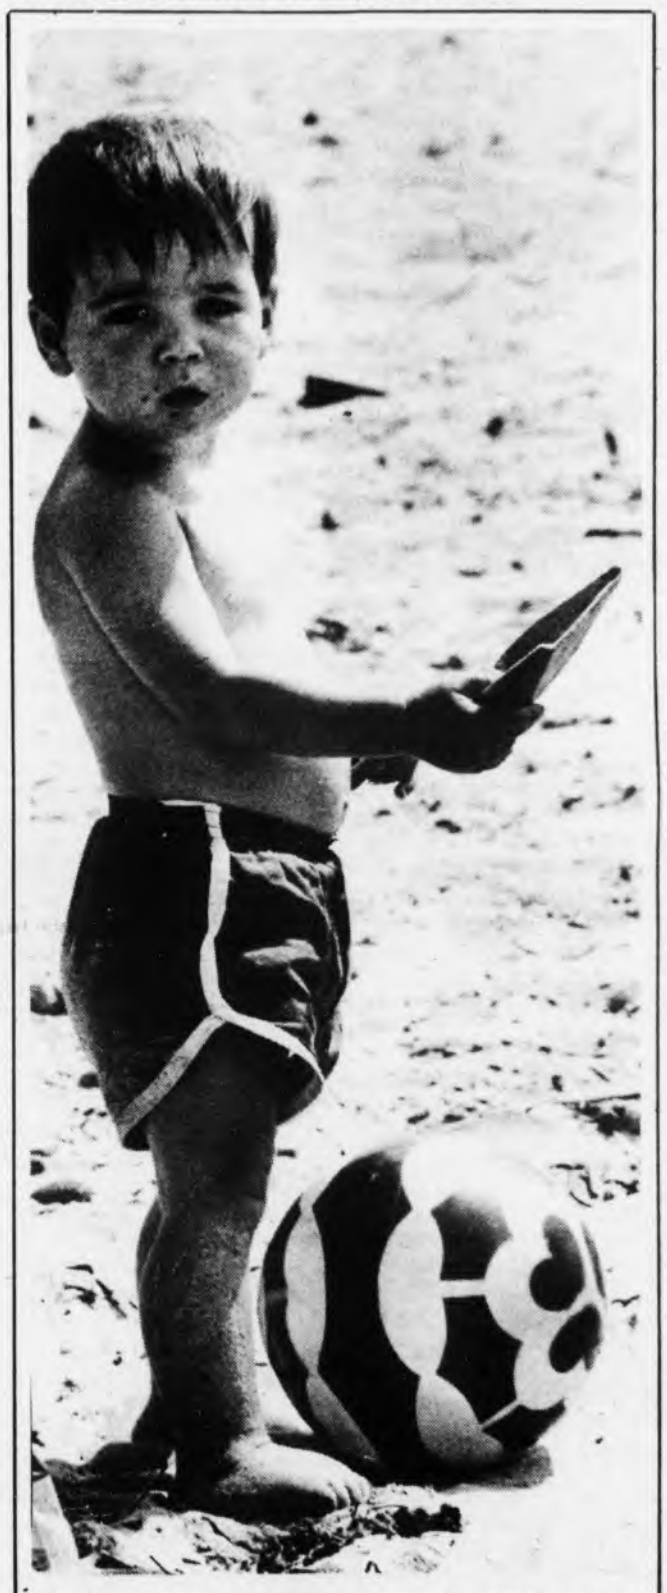
For while he was ashore during a gale on the night of April 16, 1851, the lighthouse did collapse into the sea, carrying with it the unfortunate assistant keepers, Cohasseters Joseph Wilson and Joseph Antoine. Both died, though Wilson is believed to actually have succeeded in swimming to a small rock called Gull Rock near Scituate's Minot where he later perished from exposure.

Determined to replace the destroyed light, the newly reorganized Board of Lighthouse Engineers began construction of a new granite tower, following the design of Gen. Joseph Totten of the Corps of Engineers. The year 1855 saw work begin and on October 13, 1860 the new lantern at Minot's was lit for the first time. The first head keeper of the new Minot's was Joshua Wilder. His assistants were Andrew W. Williams and William S. Taylor. Keeper Wilder remained at Minot's for less than a year, leaving on August 16, 1861. Wilder's successor was Cohasseter James J. Tower who served at the light for 13 years, leaving in 1874. His assistant, Thomas Bates from Cohasset, became head keeper of Boston Light in 1864.

Following the resignation of Head Tower Keeper in 1874 another Cohasseter assumed the post at Minot's, Head Keeper Levi L. Creed. Son of a Cohasset sea captain, Keeper Creed remained at Minot's until 1881. Among his assistants was another native son of Cohasset, Frank Farrier Martin. A second generation son of a Cohasset Portuguese family, Martin followed Levi Creed as head keeper of Minot's and served at the lonely lighthouse until 1887, when he retired from the Lighthouse Service after 25 years.

Among Martin's several assistant keepers were Cohasseters Albert Burdick and Joseph Enos Frates. Frates had arrived in Cohasset in 1859 from Fayal, Western Islands. On January 3, 1887, the former head keeper of Plymouth's Gurnet Light came to Minot's to become its new head keeper. Thus began a father-son combination that would last 37 years at the stone lighthouse.

Keeper Milton Harvey Reamy was a native of Plymouth, and served at Minot's until his retirement in 1915. His assistant keepers during that time included Goerge L. Lyons, Winfield Lincoln Creed (son of the former keeper Levi Creed), and his own son, Octavius Henry Reamy.



Another assistant keeper at that time was Roscoe Green Lopaus, whose oil portrait hangs in today's Maritime Museum at Cohasset Center. It was Octavius Reamy who was to succeed his father as the next head keeper in 1915. Then on May 11, 1924 the younger Reamy was made the new head keeper of Graves Ledge Light and his place was taken at Minot's by his former assistant, Per S. Tornberg. Tornberg, like many of the keepers of Minot's, resided with his family at the light's shore station located on Government Island, Cohasset Harbor, during his turns off duty.

The keepers rotated duty each two of three weeks, with two living at the light and the others spending time on shore. At Government Island there were two large duplex houses overlooking the harbor, and it was here that the Lighthouse Service families resided. Here also were docking facilities for the small boats used to go back and forth between the light and the land, and the keeper's administration office located nearby.

One of the duplex houses, the office and stone pier still exist and are designated as historical sites. In July of 1936 Keeper Per S. Tornberg was transferred to Annisquam Light and a new head keeper was installed.

George E. Fitzpatrick had served as Tornberg's assistant from 1924 until 1927. Transferred to Graves Ledge Light in that year, he returned to Minot's in 1936 as head keeper. Fitzpatrick was to be the last of the keepers to serve under the old U.S. Lighthouse Service, soon to be assimilated into the U.S. Coast Guard.

By 1947, the First Coast Guard District in Boston had assumed control of the light and it became automatically operated. There no longer was a need for lighthouse keepers at Minot's Ledge. For the first time since 1860 the great lantern didn't need to be turned on and off by hand, and Minot's was given back to the seagulls and to an occasional visitor. Though the keepers of Minot's Ledge have long vanished, the sturdy lighthouse still flashes its unique 1-4-3 signal to warn those who venture upon the sea to "keep-away, keep-away."

So, haven't you ever seen a short lifeguard before? Matthew Ogrodnik, 15 months, appears a bit curious as to his work assignment — guard the shovel or the ball?

Judy continues to improve

John Gilman, husband of Hingham Mariner Editor Judy Gilman is pleased to report that Judy is out of intensive care at South Shore Hospital and may receive visitors from 11 a.m. to 8 p.m.

Judy is listed in fair condition but remains in a comatose condition, recuperating from head and leg injuries. Judy, at times, has opened one eye and moved her arms and legs.

Judy was moved out of the intensive care unit Tuesday. Nurses are urging visitors so Judy will respond to continous stimulous.

Judy was injured in a one-car accident June 12 and has continued to show steady progress. John also adds that flowers may also be sent to the hospital.

All points lead to South Shore

By Judith Denzer Cooper

Well, the Boston papers have done it again. Every time I begin to think I'm part of Massachusetts they remind me that I live in a forgotten land.

I was reading the paper Saturday, June 29, and there on page 18 was an editorial entitled "A College for the South Shore." "How nice," I said, thinking of a new building for Plymouth or Duxbury or maybe Scituate.

Reading further on, I became confused. The editorial was talking about Quincy Junior College. Now, I mean no offense to Quincy or its fine school system, but what has Quincy got to do with the South Shore?

To me Quincy is as close to Boston as Brookline. It is a lovely place but it is part of metropolitan Boston. Quincy is a city and although it provides many valuable services for communities to the south or west, it is no more a part of the South Shore than Milton or Brockton.

Then that little mental bell went off reminding me that the rest of the world thinks when you travel south of Boston you see Quincy, some trees and then Cape Cod.

My question is, "What can be done to convince the Boston press and others that there is a part of Massachusetts south of Quincy, east of Brockton and north of Bourne?" And this area is called the South Shore.

Commentary

It would be fine for Quincy Junior College to get all the financial support it needs. And it would also be great if the SouthShore had a college too.I'm sure many Shouth Shore residents will attend Quincy Junior, just as they attend Massassoit or Cape Cod Community College. But no matter how good these schools are, the one thing they are not is located on the South Shore.

At least while Ian Menzies wrote his column in a Boston paper there was someone to remind readers that Plymouth and Marshfield and even Norwell and Kingston are part of Massachusetts. But Menzies has retired and people quickly forget.

Maybe the communities that consider themselves part of the South Shore could band together and have a South Shore day. We could paint the yellow lines on the roads day-glo orange and then travellers would know when they had come to the South Shore.

On the other hand,maybewe should notcomplain about the lack of attention; if too many people find out what a great place we are living in it might bring us unwelcome attention. In fact, maybe that's why the writers in the Boston papers are ignoring us; they're jealous.

It's happening . . .

Family Story Hours

The Paul Pratt Memorial Library invites school-age children and their parents to a Family Story Hour on Monday, July 15, at 7:30 p.m. This is the second in a series of five evening programs for family enjoyment.

Ms. Paula Fleming, Children's Librarian in the Boston Public Library system, will be the guest storyteller. She will tell a variety of stories, including "Why the Sea Moans" as well as a Japanese folktale of the sea, "Urashina Taro."

Ms. Fleming has performed at the Boston Globe Book Fair and throughout the Boston Library and School systems. This is her third guest appearance in Cohasset, by popular demand. Her program will last about an hour.

Next season shows

At the Cohasset Dramatic Club's recent Annual Meeting, two of the Club's three productions for its 1985-86 season were announced.

Scheduled for performance on the Town Hall stage next fall is playwright Arthur Miller's American classic "Death of a Salesman," to be directed by Cohasset's Helen Ketcham. Flo Kelly will serve as Production Manager for this outstanding modern drama.

The Dramatic Club's winter production will be Agatha Christie's mystery "The Hollow," directed by Julia W. Jordan. Betty Miessner will be the producer of the popular Christie play. The Club's spring production will be announced soon.

Newly elected to the Board of Directors of the Cohasset Dramatic Club at its recent annual meeting were John Kuhn, Don Massa, Joan Jensen and Tamsyn Elliot. Officers for the forthcoming year are Wayne Miessner, President; Yvonne Julian, Vice President; Jan Highbee, Recording Secretary; Tamsyn Elliot, Corresponding Secretary and Richard Donovan, Treasurer.

Next year's Town Hall shows will see the introduction of a newly purchased state-of-the-art miniaturized modular stage lighting system belonging to the Dramatic Club. The full stage lighting capabilities of the Town Hall auditorium can be utilized for the first time with this recent acquisition generously funded in major part by the South Shore Playhouse Associates.

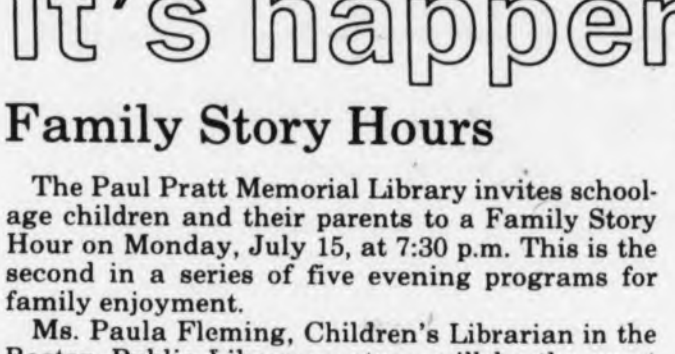
With the new lighting system the Dramatic Club will unveil another recent acquisition, a new audio system for stage sound effects.

Together, these new additions to the Club's production capabilities should assist the Dramatic Club in maintaining its stated goals of performing "worthwhile shows for dramatic, charitable and social benefit" during its forthcoming 65th season.

Carillon recital

There will be a Carillon Recital at St. Stephen's Church every Sunday afternoon through September 15.

On July 21 from 4 to 5 p.m., James R. Lawson will present the afternoon concert. The first portion of the program will include Tricentennial Music, from composers all born in 1685. That will be followed by Music from Belgium, noting that July 21 is Belgian Independence Day. The third portion will be music about New York, followed by Rivers, Music by George Gershwin, and Two Compositions for Carillon.



Lawsons is a carillonneur of the Laura Spelman Rockefeller Memorial Carillon at the Riverside Church in New York City. This instrument contains the largest and heaviest tuned carillon bell ever cast.

Cohasset Bloodmobile

One hundred and seven donors donated 87 pints of blood at the recent Cohasset Community Bloodmobile held at the Unitarian Parish House.

Groups donating to this very successful Bloodmobile were Seavey Engineering, nine; Rotary Club, nine; Norfolk Conveyor, four; Masons, three; Legion, four; School, one, First Parish, eight; Second Congregational, eight; St. Stephen's, nine; St. Anthony, 31, and independent, 21. Twenty-five new donors were included in the above.

Foreign students on a 'bus stop'

By Jim Whelan

A group of Cohasset families gathered at the Town Hall last week to welcome 38 international students into their homes for Independence Day. The visit was sponsored by the AFS International Intercultural Exchange (AFS), and comes at the end of a year-long educational program.

The students have spent the past school year in Maryland attending high school, and living with host families. Cohasset is a "bus stop" in an eight-day trip designed to afford the foreigners a glimpse of the different parts of our country.

Jane Goedecke, past president of the local AFS chapter, said the trip serves as a reorientation period for the students, between the time they leave their host families in Maryland, and when they go back to their homelands. The visit also gives local residents the chance to become acquainted with AFS and the educational program.

Goedecke said four years ago Cohasset served as a "bus stop" and the reaction was favorable. This year six Cohasset students are abroad on the AFS program, she reported. Hopefully, she continued, the brief "bus stop" visit last week will interest some Cohasset families enough to become year-long hosts.

Judy Fitzsimmons and her family hosted a girl from Brazil. Fitzsimmons requested a Brazilian student to afford her children the cultural experience, and the opportunity to brush up on her Portuguese. From 1964-1967, Fitzsimmons served in the Peace Corps working in Brazilian villages as an Ob-Gyn nurse.

Judy Volungis accepted a Thai student for the four days, primarily to give her children the cultural experience. This is the first time her family has participated in the AFS program, and she did not rule out serving as a host family for a year.

Another resident introduced their guest to the Little League. One mother requested a Swedish girl at the urging of her son, a junior at Cohasset High School.

The four-day visit was filled with activity for the students. They were scheduled for a walking tour of Cohasset and a picnic on the beach on the Fourth of July. They also got a tour of Boston, and on Friday evening at 7:30, the students put on a talent show at the Sailing Club for their host families and new American friends.

Attendance rule change

(when a note is forgotten). A kid can say, you've got to call, I have to bring in a note."

There was also some discussion on initiating new procedures for identifying those students who have brought in excuse notes from home after an absence. Chartis Langmaid and committee member Kornet both favored a system in which the office secretary hands the student a card that indicates his absence was excused. The student would show that card to each teacher, who would immediately recognize that student is entitled to make-up work for an excused absence.

Principal Streeter said such a procedure would be time-consuming and impractical.

Member Richard Conley and Mrs. Langmaid also stressed the importance of providing a "warm climate" for the high school students, where teachers would greet the students as they enter the school each morning. "When a student has been absent, the teacher should take the time to know that. And when the student comes in the next morning, he could ask, 'How are you? Do you feel better? It's good to have you back' " Langmaid suggested.

And if a student has failed to bring a note to school, that might serve to jog his memory, committee member Langmaid agreed.

Member Barbara Bliss also agreed there is a need for more flexibility in a policy where a student is punished for a parent's oversight.

In third place was the Ellis/Porter boat, crewed by Charlie Ford and Steve Smalzel, and finishing fourth was skipper Bob Jackson and his crew, Susan Riley and Nancy Riley.

SWIM TEAM

Bad weather and vacationing swimmers have caused the swim team to get off to a slow start this summer, but coach Maureen Buckley is confident that the team will be very competitive this season. The team's main objective this summer is to try and get as many of the approximately 100 members of the team involved in the meets as possible. Winning is not as important this year as making sure every member of the team is having a good time.

Buckley has been very impressed with many of the eight year-olds and under, especially several of the six year-olds. Hopefully, with several years of training, these kids will become powerhouses in the future.

The Cohasset Swim Team will open their season this Friday in Duxbury at 1 p.m. Duxbury has always been a tough competitor but Cohasset will be ready for the challenge.

2nd Congregational Church

Summer Schedule:
During July and August, the Second Congregational Church will have services as follows: Sunday, 8 a.m., Family Service, usually outdoors, always brief and appropriate for families with children. Sunday, 10 a.m., Service of Worship, with special music by soloists from the choir.

A GREAT DAY: It was with great joy that the church welcomed a visitor from Maine on Sunday, as Shawn Megathlin represented his parents, Dr. and Mrs. Keith Megathlin, in cutting the ribbon which officially opened the church's new elevator. Designated the Megathlin Elevator in memory of Shawn's grandparents, Norman and Evelyn Megathlin, it was part of the handicapped access renovation which included a new restroom and a ramp entrance.

Shawn told us the story of his own christening 19 years ago, when his great-grandmother had to be carried up to the sanctuary in order to be present. That experience was one of the seeds which led to the elevator project and to his family's gift. Of course, there were other seeds as well, for nearly every one of us knows someone who is uanble to climb stairs safely or easily.

The efforts of dozens of people over the past few years, and the donations and memorial gifts of over 200 people, finally reached a conclusion with the celebration on Sunday. The Elevator Committee, chaired by Richard Silvia, and the Trustees, chaired by Wayne Sawchuk, were assisted by everyone from Church School button-makers ("I Gave A Lift!") to quilt-stitchers, in the various fundraising efforts.

Let us go into the house of the Lord whether we are young or old, able or disabled. Let us go into the house of the Lord to be healed and challenged by his presence. Let us go into the house of the Lord!

BAPTIZED: Last Sunday was Kenneth David Evans, son of Jill and David Evans.

Summer reading required for 8-12 encouraging students to read, they disliked the idea of forcing them to read with the threat of a test or report facing them in the fall. Conley advised the administration that a program should have been developed in a way to encourage students to read, and it should have been done before school concluded.

Deer Hill librarian Marge Murphy noted that the past year's sixth graders were given a suggested reading list, but were not told to prepare for a test or written report. The committee emphasized the reading requirement pertained only to the students who are returning as 8-12 graders.

Nancy Sandell of Stevens Lane expressed her support of a reading program, but said she favored a "fun program" that would encourage students to read for their own pleasure.

Although there was some discussion on giving those students who read the two books extra credit, Supt. Eugene Crowell said the English teachers intended to have the reports or tests included as part of the first term grade.

Committee members agreed the concept was good, but a reading program should have been developed and brought before the school committee before the close of school.

It was decided that Supt. Crowell will send a letter Monday to all senior high school parents stating the English Dept. "encourages your child to read" through the summer. The book report or quiz mark will be added to the student's first term grade in the upcoming school year.

A list of the recommended books will be attached to the letter, and will be given to the Paul Pratt Library.

Cohasset for the harvesting of shellfish. And although there were 16 permits issued for shellfishing last year, that number has risen to 28 in 1985.

There are commercial licenses granted for the taking of mussels, Ritter said. Most of the commercial digging is done in the fall and winter. But with the ban on harvesting in effect now, no recreational digging will be allowed inside the breakwaters of Cohasset Harbor.

S.S. Hospital opens Same Day Admission suite

In an effort to reduce the cost of inpatient hospital stays for certain patients having elective types of surgery performed, South Shore Hospital has opened a new Same Day Admission Suite.

The new facility will permit most elective surgery patients to remain at home and avoid being routinely hospitalized on the day before surgery.

Under the hospital's new same day admission program, the vast majority of these patients will instead visit the hospital two to three days before scheduled surgery to complete pre-admission interviews, assessments and testing.

Only elective surgery patients with complicated medical histories such as a heart condition, uncontrolled diabetes or hemophilia would be required to spend the pre-operative night in the hospital.

On the day of surgery, patients will complete an admission workup and will then report to the Same Day Admission Suite for surgical preparation and medication. After their procedure, the patient will remain in the hospital for at least one night prior to going home.

William Clark, president of South Shore Hosptial, says the new admission policy will benefit patients, health insurance companies and the hospital. "We are very pleased that the new admission suite will allow most patients having elective surgery to remain at home with their families on the night before surgery. This should add to their comfort and will, at the same time, reduce the cost of their hospitalization. In addition, South Shore Hosptial, which suffers from a chronic shortage of beds, will benefit by being able to admit other patients."

South Shore Hospital is a 280-bed, acute care, regional community hospital which serves the medical needs of 361,000 South Shore residents.

Saturday, July 13 at 8 p.m., in the Scituate High School auditorium, "The New Black Eagle Jazz Band" will be presented by the Prelude Concert Series, in honor of the Plymouth County Tercentenary celebration. Tickets are $10. For information, call 545-0238.

Juried photography show set for Heritage Days

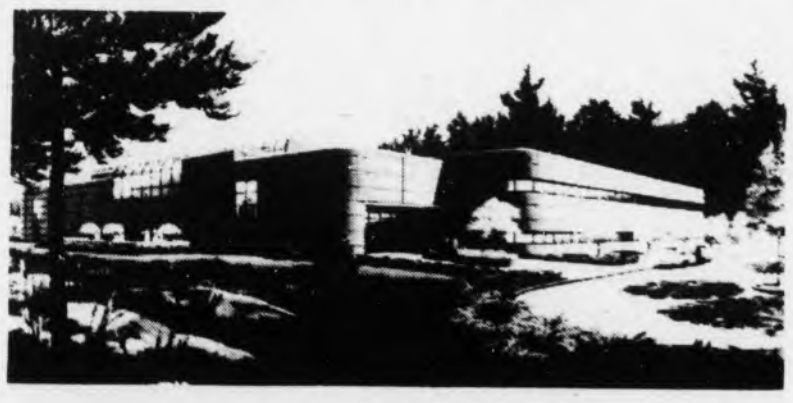
South Shore area amateur photographers are invited to exhibit their work in the Juried Photography Show to be held Aug. 10, and 11 as part of the town-wide observance of Heritage Days, sponsored by the Scituate Chamber of Commerce.

There will also be a special contest for the best vertical photo of a Scituate scene to be published on the cover of the 1986 edition of the "Little Yellow Pages Phone Book."

The deadline for entries in the two competitions is Aug. 3. All entries will be exhibited at St. Mary's Hall, Scituate Harbor, from 10 a.m. to 5 p.m. Aug. 10 and from noon to 3 p.m. Aug. 11.

On the first day of the exhibit, the public will vote for their favorites.

The judging of all entries will be at G.A.R. Hall on Country Way, near First Parish Road, Aug. 4 from 9 a.m. to noon. The public is welcome.



The Chamber of Commerce will present plaques to the winners in both the juried and public judging while the H.A. Manning Co., publishers of the little telephone directory, will present a plaque to the winner of the special contest. The awards will be made on Aug. 11 following the Boat Parade.

Amateur photographers regardless of age may submit any number of unframed black and white or color prints for the Juried Show and color prints for the special contest. The entry fee is $2 per print.

The maximum size is 16" x 20". Each print must be mounted or matted and unframed. Each entry must have a title printed on the back only, along with the photographer's name, address and telephone number.

All entries must be delivered to Scituate photographer Rudolph Mitchell at his home, 93 Maple Street, by Aug. 3 and picked up there as soon as possible after Aug. 11. Additional information pertaining to applications and rules may be obtained by calling him at 545-2137.

Attitude makes Civic softball exciting

By Melissa L. Barcomb

What constitutes an exciting fun, softball league?

According to Carmine Carlucci, sponsor for Strawberry Parfait softball team, attitude is most important.

"Top priority is having a good time and generally the players enjoy a victory," he chuckled.

Originally, in order to play South Shore Civic Softball in the softball league, one had to be involved with Civil Service.

Seven years ago, the league was founded by Joseph Mayer and players would participate on the South Shore Civil Service Softball League.

In 1979, the Cohasset team was called "Cohasset Police."

At that time Carmine Carlucci was with the Greenhouse Restaurant. He personally sponsored the team and changed their name to the "Greenhouse."

During the 1979-80 season the Greenhouse players won the championship.

The next year, under a new name, "The Strawberry Parfait," the team won again.

The Strawberry Parfait team was sponsored by Carlucci, using his newly opened restaurant's name.

In the 1981-82 season, Parfait lost to the Marshfield Benchwarmers in the seventh game of the championship series.

Anyone who is 19 years-old and over and has had his roster okayed by the league officers can play in the league.

Sunday's softball games are very family-oriented.

No alcohol is allowed while the team is playing and each year an all-star team plays a game to benefit a cause.

Last year the proceeds of the game went to Bruce Macdonald, a Hingham Police officer, whose wife passed away.

The all-star team consists of two or three people who are chosen from different teams in the league.

The two coaches for the team are the coaches that have teams in first place.

The person or business sponsoring a team is only required to pay the league fee.

It's up to the individual sponsor to supply uniforms.

Each year Carmine has provided the team with full uniforms, including individualized jackets.

What determines a good coach for a softball team?

"Someone who has discipline and leadership," Carmine said.

Although it's very important the coach get along well with the team, it's equally as important that no favoritism is shown.

This year the teams play two, seven-inning games every Sunday rather than one nine-inning game.

"Playing the doubleheaders helps to shorten the season," said Carmen.

The Parfaits' biggest rivalry game is against Hingham's Building #19. "They have always been our strongest competitors and they're also fun to play against," Carmine said.

When Carmine first began sponsoring the team, he thought it would promote advertising.

Today he supports the Strawberry Parfait softball team because he "loves being a part of a super group of people.

"I'm proud of being a sponsor in this league."

Other leagues have asked Carmine to sponsor them, but he enjoys himself too much with this South Shore Civil Service League.

A full roster of South Shore Civil Softball League teams include Building #19, Sunshine Carpet, Clipper Ship, the "Over the Hill Gang," Anderson Insurance and the Weymouth Police Department.

Others include Strawberry Parfait, Cafe 1622, Marshfield Sunoco, Ocean Kai and Yankee Oil.

Coastal Barrier maps impossible to read

(Following is an excerpt from U.S. Congressman Gerry Studds' newsletter and comments about coastal barrier resources.)

Last week I joined with several other members of Congress in writing to Interior Secretary Donald Hodel to request an extension until September 30 of the period for receiving public comments on the Coastal Barrier Resources System report recently released by the Department of the Interior. I requested the extension of the comment period - currently scheduled to expire on July 15 - to provide state and local officials and other interested parties sufficient time to analyze and comment on the "inventory" set of maps that accompanied the report.

These maps, which are supposed to identify undeveloped coastal barriers that may qualify for inclusion in the system, are difficult, if not impossible, to read. While I have been assured that obvious errors in the maps will be corrected, it is important that an extension of time be provided to allow thorough and conclusive review of the maps and the report.

The Coastal Barrier Resources System was established by Congress in 1982 to protect ecologically fragile areas from development. Under the law, certain undeveloped coastal barriers were designated as areas where all federal subsidies and expenditures were prohibited. This meant that federal flood insurance would not be available for those wishing to build on undeveloped coastal barriers, nor would federal funds be provided for local water and sewer projects or the construction of roads. There were 44 areas designated in Massachusetts in 1982 under the original law - 37 of which were located in the 10th Congressional District.

As a senior member of the House Merchant Marine and Fisheries Committee, I wish to assure communities concerned with the preliminary report that I intend to be directly involved in the Congressional review of the Interior Department's new recommendations. These recommendations identify 36 additional undeveloped coastal barriers in Massachusetts which the Interior Department believes may be suitable for inclusion in the system. Nothing, however, can be added to or removed from the system without an act of Congress. Neither the maps nor the Interior Department's recommendations have the force of law. In reviewing the final recommendations of the Interior Department, Congress will be guided both by the need to preserve our nation's precious barrier resources and by the necessity to accommodate the legitimate needs of our communities for adequate transportation facilities, access to potential water supplies, and other services. As this process goes forward, I will do everything I possibly can to see that the best overall interests of the people of coastal Massachusetts are served.

Commuter boat update

Assistant Secretary of Legislation, Michael Shea, said this week the Executive Office of Transportation and Construction is seeking legislation to authorize spending now used towards construction on the Southeast Expressway to continue to subsidize the operation of commuter boats between Hingham and Boston.

"I'd imagine it will be used for the boats we presently subsidize," he said. "If legislation is not passed, the subsidy will not be available unless we receive other funds.

"We have received great support for this," he continued. "Ridership has increased steadily. The best thing we have going for us is word of mouth. It's a relaxing alternative to other modes of commuting."

The state presently subsidizes three boats operated by the Boston Harbor Commuter Service, "The Dragonfish," "The Chimera," and "The Captain Joseph."

A summer's idyllic vacation with 'Daddy'

By Dorothy Squier

"And of course I'll be there all summer with the children. Your Dorothy is one of the most promising on the list 'Daddy'Reddy wants to invite."

I held my breath while my dancing teacher pleaded.

"And who is 'Daddy' Reddy?" my mother asked.

"He rooms with my family on Clinton Street," Doris said. "He was head of the Dorothea Dix School for Stage Children where I went to school. He's a lawyer in Boston."

Mama looked at me, my eyes round and entreating, and she smiled. "I'm sure she needs a rest from all her activities, but we can't afford . . ."

"She's an invited guest. 'Daddy' is a generous philanthropist with a strong interest in the theatre. please let her come with us. She's so thin."

That did it. Mama said yes and all the last week of the school year I could think of nothing else but the fairy tale town of New Salem.

It was my first time away from home yet I could hardly wait. That Saturday I was all too aware of my new clothes . . . brown sandals, socks with plaid tops, a matching plaid ribbon with streamers on my straw hat and a new pongee dress.

We met at the Track Gate at the North Station in Boston where our parents bade us goodbye. It was our first train ride and we wiggled on the scratchy green seats as we rattled northwest across the state, following the Ware River first on one side then the other.

At Athol a horse and wagon met us, our straw suitcases were piled in back and we were off to New Salem, a tiny town on a hill at the foot of the Berkshires.

Our house was the largest in town, a white twenty-room farm house facing west at a meeting of three roads, marked by a wooden obelisk with names of the surrounding towns, set in a circle of tiger lilies. The town south of us was Millington, innudated years later when the Quabbin reservoir was opened. As a succesful lawyer, 'Daddy' was deeply involved in the settling of claims when parcels of land and home were taken by eminent domain and bodies exhumed from the cemetery to be buried elsewhere.

Up the Millington road we rolled and rounded the corner into our driveway. At one side was an apple tree with a swing and a greensward set up with croquet stakes and wickets ready for a game. Through the kitchen door to greet us came Lonnie Bancroft, the previous owner - a wise old man with crippled hands who stayed on to help, then 'Daddy's' brother Bill who drove the seven-passenger Reo touring car with the jump seats, and finally Mrs. O'Neil, the mother of two of our girls. She did the cooking.

We traipsed in lugging our suitcases and stopped to gape.

"I never saw such a big kitchen with so many tables," I cried.

An old organ stood in the far corner and several drop-leaf pine tables were against the walls; the one next to the black iron stove had a corner of its leaf cut out to fit around the hot water tank! A big square oak table in the center was surrounded by odd chairs to seat the rummy players gathered each night under the light of the hanging oil lamp.

'Daddy' stood tall and straight talking to Doris. He had a silver fringe around his pink bald head, a neat grey mustache and smiling blue eyes.

Doris nodded and called out, "OK! Everybody up the back stairs and we'll get settled in our rooms."

We climbed eagerly, then down a long hall with six bedrooms, and a room-size bath off the north wall, the other wall covered with tall theatre billboards, even one of Anna Pavlova in her Dragon-fly costume. 'Daddy' had taken us to the Boston Opera House out on Huntington Avenue to see her dance that winter. She was my idol.

Opposite this poster was what was to become my room for the next ten summers, to be shared of course. Each room had a double bed, some an extra cot, bureaus, chairs, and straw mats, cool and clean.

At the front of the house were four more guest rooms and another room-size modern bath with six early Hitchcock chairs against the wall!

Next to these was 'Daddy's' summer law office with a roll top desk and crowded bookcases. Here the walls were covered with life-size protraits and photographs of his friends. We stared at Reverend William Harmon Van Allen of the Church of the Advent in Boston, then at Pauline Frederick who had autographed her picture to "dear Tom."

"Do you suppose he was in love with her once and she turned him down?"

"Sh! Here he comes!"

A door opened on a long top piazza open to the sky and there was a hammock promising summer nights watching the stars come out.

Across from "Daddy's" office was the Gyp Room. We made up the name because most everything in it had been bought from Egypt when 'Daddy' took his yearly Mediterranean cruise. Persian rugs on the floor, a baby-grand piano near the fireplace, an exquisite suite of Louis Quinze glided furniture, a down-cushioned sofa, five hanging colored-glass lamps, tooled leather floor cushions... our eyes were saucers. Oil paintings with wide goldleaf frames hung on the walls. Many of these 'Daddy' had taken for payment in estate settlements.

And in between hung a myriad of momentos . . . Dutch shoes from Holland, tambourines from Italy, tassled castanets from Spain, ropes of coral from the Mediterranean, carved wooden rosaries and crucifixes from Bethlehem, and from Egypt deep blue donkey beads, and even silver anklets with tiny bells from Armenia. Then came the photographs of the original Dorothea Dix girls seated on camels at the foot of the pyramids.

"There's Doris and there's Alice!" I squealed with excitement. "Look Millie! Look Maisie!"

"Imagine Alice on a camel!" Maisie laughed. "How'd she ever get up there?"

Alice was our accompanist and a gifted pianist. She could always "follow" you if you made a mistake or prompt you when you forgot your lines.

This room became our gathering place with Alice ever at the piano. Her brother John Sullivan, wrote the lyric to "Irene" and other musicals and sent Alice the scores. By summer's end we knew them all by heart.

The hall outside this rom was lined with books, an extensive collection on the history of the theatre.

Over the barn at the end of the hall where my room was, 'Daddy' had built a little theatre with a stage and long mahogany benches from an old abandoned church. Niches along the walls held marble replicas of Greek statues. At one side a door opened on a hayloft filled with hay. Glory! What a spot for hide-and-seek! What an invitation to the dance of summer. And all this for us!

From our bedroom windows we could see across the road to the North Lot, a bucolic scene. Tall old maples, a barn, an ancient pump that brought forth icy spring water, a canvas hammock, a swing, a seesaw . . . all this made by the hand of Mr.Sampson, a local American Indian who did odd jobs around town. Then down a little slope and wonders of wonders - a regulation tennis court! Over a stone wall in the next field were rows of gnarled apple trees - one with a tree house and real climbing stairs. From this aerie we could see Mt. Monadnock in one direction, and Mt. Tom in the other.

Here in the North Lot we'd spend languid afternoons reading, lazing in the hammock, embroidering tea towels or playing tennis. Two of the old church benches held the spectators and those waiting to play. 'Daddy' was a proficient player and a patient teacher, yet he delighted in promoting great rivalry.

Sometimes we'd carry the top part of our Victrola over from the house and listen to ballet music or dance to Coppelia. There were trunks of costumes from "Midsummer Night's Dream," which the school had put up in Boston Symphony Hall. We'd dress up in the mustard seed costumes and perform under the trees.

Back in the house we explored the first floor. The dining room windows faced southwest. A plate rail high around the wall held antique handleless cups and rare old china plates. The mirrored sideboard was laden with silver platters, serving dishes and pitchers.

The long table had eighteen places and when the number dwindled we'd move up near 'Daddy's' place at the head. One year he invited his French teacher from the Berlitz School, Monsieur Bloch and his wife and daughter Angel and we were taught to speak French at the table.

Next to the front door were two connecting parlors with another piano and another Victrola! Next was a billiard room with a green felt table and cue sticks racked on the wall. Here again 'Daddy' proved a patient teacher and had a better time than any of us.

Next came Bill's room and then Lonnie's. They lived here year round, spending the winters by the kitchen stove amusing each other by quoting Shakespeare: "The bell, Duncan, did you not hear it? or discussing the idea of a stroll to the 'Emporium' across the general store and Post Office.

Once each summer we arose in the dark for a trip to Poorhouse Hill to see the sunrise, then back home in time to hear the old school bell ringing and the call for breakfast. It rang at quarter to eight and the call came up from the kitchen. "First Call!" Second call came at eight, then we heard "Last call or no breakfast!" We flew down to fresh boiled eggs, cereal, plates of buttered toast and pitchers of milk. Dishesof home made unforgettable raspberry jam sat beside the toast. It was 'Daddy's' Machiavellian intention to fatten us up. His food bills must have been staggering.

He was the most gracious of hosts who on frequent weekends entertained his law partners or a member of the high church or a New York stage personality.

These were idyllic summers and Labor Day came too soon, yet as carelessly as I had left my family in June, the minute our train pulled into the North Station something happened when I looked up and saw my father coming toward me. A forgotten place inside me swelled and burst. Like an arrow I flew into his arms.

"Oh Papa! Papa!" I wept.

Vo-tech loan discussed by school board reps

By Mary Mahoney

The fate of a $700,000 loan for repairs to the South Shore Vocational-Technical High School will be determined tonight (July 10) when the District School Committee considers the return of $70,000 to the eight member towns. If the money is not returned, local officials threaten to reject necessary approval of the loan.

The committee had already approved authorization of the repair loan during its June 12 meeting but scheduled a special meeting Tuesday, July 2 when it voted again after Whitman officials protested they had not been advised of the June 12 session until eight days after the meeting was held. The error was later traced to a problem with postal deliveries, according to one school administrator.

Officials from Hanover, Hanson, Whitman and Scituate met at Hanover Town Hall prior to the meeting Tuesday at the Vo-Tech campus confirming support of the borrowing plan for repairs but also insisting that a $70,000 item in the 1985-86 Vo-Tech budget for repairs be returned to the member towns. If the school obtains the $700,000 loan, the $70,000 would represent a surplus since it would no longer be needed.

If one of the member towns rejects the loan plan, the school would have to draft a new proposal for financing major repairs which include a new roof and new septic system at the regional school in Hanover.

Whitman selectman Richard Rosen told officials gathered at Town Hall that a warrant article for a special town meeting, scheduled for July 11 in Whitman, asks voters to reject the loan proposal.

"We are going in with the intent to defeat the loan and it will be defeated unless the (Vo-Tech) budget is reduced."

Scituate selectman Joseph Norton confirmed that officials in that town "have no problem with the repairs if they are necessary" but he said he was concerned about the surplus $70,000. "Scituate has never refused South Shore Vo-Tech anything," Norton said. "We've been reluctant at times but we've given them everything they have asked for. There are times, though, when we have to draw the line and this is where we draw it."

Hanover selectman A. Donald Deluse objected to the way the vote to approve the repair loan was handled although he said Hanover officials are also in favor of the proposal.

"How come they (school committee members) could not communicate with us prior to the vote?"

Later, when officials sat in on the school committee meeting, a verbal tug-of-war developed among members over the need to discuss the $70,000 budget issue.

"The budget has nothing to do with this," responded Chairman Walter Easttey to a call for a discussion from Hanson member James McDermott.

"The $70,000 is in our budget and it needs to be recertified," added Whitman representative Lloyd Patriquin.

Easttey left the decision up to Vo-Tech Supt.-Director Clifford Easton who agreed that the issue should be part of the agenda for the meeting scheduled tonight (July 10).

"The fate of the $70,000 is indeed related to the issue of the $700,000 loan and I would tend to agree that we do discuss this issue preliminary to the next meeting."

Easton supported the positions held by Patriquin and McDermott who urged that the $70,000 be returned to the member towns but Robert Molla, Norwell's representative and member David Chittim of Cohasset favored holding the funds for one year before returning as reduced assessments. Easttey insisted the committee keep the money as a "cushion" against possible vandalism to the school.

"I have done a lot of soul searching on this issue," explained Easton. "The initial purpose of the $70,000 was to pay the first year's principal and interest on a bond issue or to pay for any repairs on a scheduled basis. Loyalties or emotions or what I really want to do doesn't matter when weighing against what is right. If the $700,000 loan is approved and obtained," he continued, "then the need for the $70,000 evaporates so the $70,000 should be sent back to the communities. That's my opinion. When you examine the rightness with regard to the initial purpose, for us to retain the money would be bordering on misuse of funds."

Patriquin saw the return of the $70,000 as the committee's moral obligation, the same obligation he urged his town to consider before the $3.1 million Vo-Tech budget was approved.

"Now the situation is reversed. It is our moral obligation to return the $70,000.

Molla, agreeing with Chittim, added, "I think town officials have to have a ltitle more faith in their representatives to this committee. This is not the time to return the money but it will still be there at the end of the year either to use to reduce assessments or to return to the towns."

Returning the $70,000, said McDermott, would restore the credibility of the committee. "It seems to me this would do something to strengthen credibility. Then when we have to ask for someone to have faith it will be there. Keeping the $70,000 and then going for the $700,000 is like having your cake and eating it twice."

"There is a need to be flexible urged Patriquin. "It to the town of Hanson." Young also criticized Easttey's hasty motion to adjourn the meeting without giving town officials an opportunity to speak.

"When the chair attempts to close the meeting without hearing from officials, that is an indictment of the lack of credibility," he said.

only takes one town to vote not to approve this loan and then we're done."

Easttey attempted to halt discussion and called for a vote to adjourn the meeting. But at the insistence of Patriquin and McDermott, gave town officials 15 minutes to present their side of the issue.

Whitman selectman Rosen asked that the money be returned to the towns and threatened that the special town meeting on the loan approval needed only three people to vote it down.

"I have a feeling we have an ax held over our heads," Easttey commented.

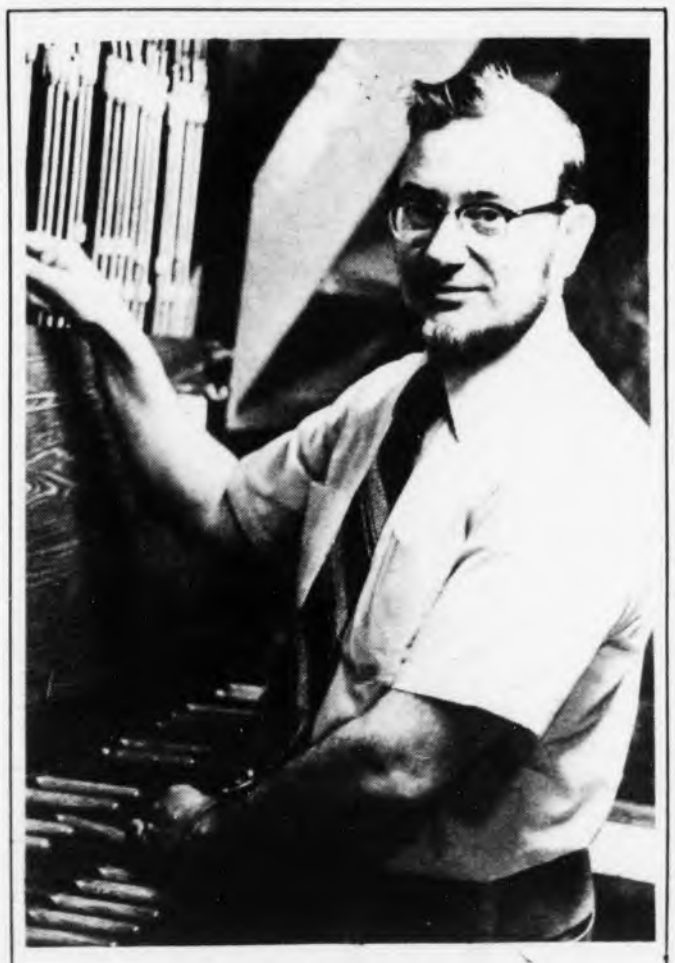
Cohasset carillon: a unique No. American instrument

By Karen Cubie

It was late in the afternoon and the South Shore Arts Festival was winding down. As the first chords of George Matthew's carillon recital drifted down across the Cohasset Commons from the bell tower of St. Stephen's Church, a few people wandered down to the edge of the duck pond to listen.



Matthew, the carilloneur of the 56-bell Maguire Memorial carillon of the First Presbyterian Church in Stamford, CT, was playing the 51-bell carillon that has been housed by the St. Stephen's Church since 1924. It was a gift to the church by Jane W. Bancroft in memory of her mother, Jessie M. Barron, a member of St. Stephen's Parish.

The Cohasset carillon is one of only 150 such instruments in North America. The organ-like instrument sits in the bell tower of St. Stephen's Church. The oak keys are connected by levers to the bells in the belfry above the instrument. When the instrument is played it can be heard across the commons.

"The distance it can be heard depends on the wind, on other sounds, and on the volume at which the instrument is played," carillon enthusiast Dr. F. Randolph Philbrook said. "Tunes can be recognized half a mile away. Concerts can be enjoyed at the other end of the Cohasset Commons, 1,000 feet away."

Dr. Philbrook has been playing the instrument himself for about four years.

"I've been interested for many years," he said. "I heard Kamiel Lefevere (a famous carilloneur) here in the early 1930s. I got to know him, and he invited me into the bell tower. At the time I was minoring in music, and majoring in pre-med. I decided then that I would like to play some day — but I didn't have time till I retired from an active medical practice."

George Matthew

Dr. Philbrook has the use of three carillons at his disposal.

"I'm on the board of fellows at Norwich University in Norfield, Vermont, and I occasionally play recitals on their instrument," he said. "From time to time I play the Norwood instrument. I also do some arranging. The bells require special arrangements to avoid harmonic clashes."

Earl Chamberlain, the former organist for St. Stephen's Church, has been the carilloneur since 1938.

"I came as the organist, the music director for the church," he said. "When I retired as music director a dozen years ago, the new organist didn't want to take up the carillon, so I stayed on in that capacity."

Chamberlain was not familiar with the instrument when he came to the church.

"I was interested in playing the organ and directing chorus," he said. "I was taught the carillon by the previous carilloneur."

Chamberlain ran an informal carillon school for about 12 years.

"He still gives lessons — advice, counsel, help, assistance and suggestions," said Mary Kennedy, a carilloneur and former student of Chamberlain.

Anyone can take lessons on the instrument free of charge.

"There are no lessons during the summer," Chamberlain said. "We like to know the student's musical background because it isn't a learning instrument. Piano ability is necessary, and organ experience would be preferable."

According to Chamberlain, the carillon was developed about 300 years ago. Although it is set up much like an organ it is not a forerunner of the

Politicus — by David A. Mittell, Jr.

A vote to shun the 'Sanctuary Movement'

Several weeks ago my distinguished columnist colleague Darrell Berger wrote sympathetically of a Cape Cod Unitarian church that had voted to declare itself "sanctuary." The Sanctuary Movement is a loose network of American citizens and churches who help Salvadorean, Guatemalan, and Haitian nationals to enter the United States illegally and to avoid detection thereafter. Herewith another view on the subject.

The Sanctuary Movement began more or less spontaneously about four years ago when good numbers of Salvadorean and Guatemalan refugees from the strife in those lands started showing up in Arizona on the dusty road out of Nogales, Mexico. There they were often picked up by the border patrol, nearly as often dispatched at U.S. government expense to airports in San Salvador and Guatemala City, where less often but often, they ended up dead.

The State Department, presumably not wishing to offend the sensibilities of our nominal allies in Guatemala and El Salvador, has argued that most of these people are economic opportunists, not political refugees, and therefore do not qualify for asylum. To those moved to help them as they have stumbled across the border absent all possessions and absent in many cases a number of already dead relatives, these are refugees in every moral and legal construction. On that they have probably been right and the State Department has probably been wrong.

But morally and politically it is a long way from the Sonora Mountains on the Mexican border in 1981 to Cambridge and Cape Cod, Massachusetts in 1985. Sanctuary has become a movement as opposed to a few religiously motivated individuals moved to help a few desperate Central Americans. In becoming a movement, a Movement I should say, it has gotten sufficiently rotten and politicized to be (in my view) well worth shunning when it comes up before your church or town meeting.

There are essentially two things rotten (rotten I believe, rather than merely incorrect or misguided) about the Sanctuary Movement. The first is its extreme selectivity, which was clearly exposed in Cambridge, where Sanctuary has already come up and been voted for by the City Council. In April the Cambridge City Council voted to declare Cambridge a "sanctuary city," and to order city employees to violate Federal Immigration Law with respect to illegal immigrants from just three countries: El Salvador, Guatemala, and Haiti.

Now, think what that means. Of the 140 odd countries in the world a good hundred deny their citizens the simple human rights that Americans and their English forbears have taken for granted for several centuries. As Cambridge took its stand, remnants of the 1980 Mariel boat-lift from Cuba languished in detention awaiting repatriation to Castro's dungeons. Nicaraguan Miskito Indians, living with no rights whatever under the Sandinista government, and with little backing in America, prepared to negotiate with Nicaragua as an alternative to genocide. Yet the putatively enlightened university city of Cambridge could not be bothered about Cubans or Miskitos or Chadeans or Sri Lankan Tamils or other nationals facing annihilation around the world. How on earth does the Sanctuary Movement make its fine moral distinctions?

What should be perfectly obvious is that the Sanctuary Movement simply cannot wait to embarrass its own government and President. Their "moral" distinction is based on the fact that whereas the Cuban and Nicaraguan governments are personae non gratae in Ronald Reagan's Washington, El Salvador, Guatemala, and Haiti are our nominal allies. Therefore the Sanctuary Movement sheds crocodile tears for the legitimate victims of Salvadorean, Guatemalan, and Haitian violence, while remaining oblivious to the legitimate victims of violence elsewhere. The founders of Sanctuary in 1981 were motivated by compassion and religious beliefs; but the Sanctuary Movement of 1985 is fired primarily by hatred of Ronald Reagan, not by compassion. The extreme selectivity of their "compassion" proves it.

The second rotten thing about the Sanctuary Movement is its over-fondness for civil disobedience. The problem with civil disobedience with respect to refugees from Central America is that lawful ways of influencing policy are quite open and have not been exhausted. If one opposes Ronald Reagan's Central America policy, so do many members of Congress, a prominent example being Gerry Studds, who happens to have an office in Hanover. He, Sen. Kennedy, and others have had some success in opening our doors to the victims of our friends. I happen to have four Salvadoreans living in my own house, and I think it is relevant to this discussion to point out that they all have "green cards" documenting them as legal immigrants.

Secondly, the United States has laws on the books requiring the government to accept bona fide political refugees. If the Reagan Administration is letting political concerns cause it to violate such laws, Lord knows we have enough lawyers around to haul them into court and require them to admit those who are in danger in their native lands.

Thirdly, most of the refugees the Sanctuary Movement is allegedly concerned about enter the U.S. illegally through Mexico after having entered Mexico legally. Many desire only safe passage to Canada, whose immigration policies are in general more open than ours. If Sanctuary's desire is to help the victims of violence as opposed to embarrassing Washington, much more could be done to help Mexico help them, and to help them get to Canada. Perhaps the reluctance of the refugees to stay in Mexico is an indication that at least in part they are "economic opportunists."

With regard to civil disobedience, it seems to me that Americans who partake liberally of the benefits of citizenship ought to be mighty reluctant to break the laws under which our very citizenship exists. I don't suppose that if my Salvadorean friends lost their green card I would turn them out or in, or that I would call the border patrol upon sighting a bedraggled pedestrian on the road out of Nogales. But I would like to think that I would extend myself a little in trying legal remedies before considering the knowing violation of American Law. The Sanctuary Movement would have my respect, maybe even my agreement, if I were convinced they had so extended themselves. Rather, it appears that for many in the Movement a little civil disobedience is the first red meat they have enjoyed in years.

The pity is that such an attitude quickly isolates the perpetrators on the ineffectual fringe of politics. It loses me (a curmudgeon of the center-right) and risks losing Darrell Berger (a gentleman of the center-left.) The pity also is there is much to criticize about America' present policy in Central America, for the Reagan crowd is just as blind to the evil acts of the extreme right abroad as the Sanctuary crowd is blind to the evil acts of the extreme left abroad. The pity is that the right and left in America are more fired by hostility to one another than by any real knowledge of what is going on in the world.

Beacon Hill Roll Call

"Beacon Hill Roll Call" records local representatives' votes on one roll call and local senators' votes on eight roll calls from June 29 to July 5.

1985 BUDGET (6400)

House 125-24, Senate 30-1, accepted the report of the conference committee which drafted a compromise version of an $8.8 billion fiscal 1986 budget. Supporters said the package was a fiscally responsible one which would deliver quality services.

Opponents said the package was loaded with waste and patronage and offered no relief to taxpayers.

Reps. Suzanne Bump, Robert Cerasoli, William Flynn, Frank Hynes and Sens. Anna Buckley, Bill Golden, Paul Harold and Edward Kirby voted "yea." Rep. Robert Ambler did not vote and Reps. Charles Mann and Mary Jeanette Murray voted "nay."

RETURN SURPLUS (S 2384)

Senate 27-8, rejected a fiscal 1985 supplemental budget amendment requiring that any surplus remaining at the end of a fiscal year be divided equally and returned to the following year's income tax filers.

Supporters said this insures that unspent money is returned to taxpayers. Opponents said the money should be spent on some underfunded programs to help the needy.

Sen. Kirby voted "yea" and Sens. Golden, Harold and Buckley voted "nay."

SURTAX (S 2384)

Senate 23-12, rejected a supplemental budget amendment repealing the 7.5 percent surtax. Supporters argued that repeal of this temporary 1975 tax was long overdue and would offer true tax relief which could easily be funded by the state's surplus.

Opponents said the state cannot afford the revenue loss of millions of dollars and said it would result in a decrease in vital services or a hike in another tax.

Sens. Golden, Harold and Kirby voted "yea." Sen. Buckley voted "nay."

ABATEMENTS (S 2384)

Senate 25-10, rejected a $20 million supplemental budget amendment increasing the property tax abatement for certain elderly homeowners from $500 to $800.

Supporters said this would help thousands of low-income elderly people keep their homes.

Opponents said the amendment does nothing for elderly renters and claimed the state cannot afford the money.

Sen. Kirby voted "yea." Sens. Harold, Golden and Buckley voted "nay."

BOSTON BAILOUT (H 6391)

Senate 26-10, gave near final approval to the so-called "Boston Bailout Bill" allowing any city or town to impose a tax of five percent on jet fuel and to raise the tax on hotel and motel rooms from 5.7 to up to 9.7 percent.

Supporters said the bill will help Boston raise $20 million to bail the city out of its current financial crisis and claimed that Boston has been fiscally responsible and has finally put its financial house in order.

Opponents, claiming the bill was unexpectedly rushed through the Senate, said the bill would hurt the hotel business and would jeopardize jobs in the airline industry.

Sens. Buckley, Golden and Harold voted "yea." Sen. Kirby voted "nay."

Fishing report

SALTWATER

Bluefish: All Cape waters, South Cape beaches, Marthas Vineyard, Nantucket, Wellfleet and Provincetown. Plymouth Harbor and off the Plymouth power plant.

Striped Bass: Good catches of bass 20 to 45 pound range have been weighed in the last week. Boat and shore fishing from Boston Harbor to the east end of the Canal has been good with live lining pogies being the most productive method.

Flounder: Good in bays and Boston Harbor, Plymouth, Duxbury, and off the Scituate beaches. Seaworms are the best bet and fish in 20 to 25 feet of water off sandy beaches.

Cod: Most have moved to deeper, colder water. Fifty to 60 foot depthsand deeper are best producing areas and shore fishing has dropped off to a few small fish. Nine to 17 oz. jigs are the best bet for the boat fisherman for cod.

Tuna: Showing up on Stellwagen Bank, Provincetown, and Wellfleet off the beaches. Stick boats have taken several fish and a few have come in on handlines and rod and reel.

Fluke: Summer flounder are showing up on the sandy beaches off Cape Cod and North to Plymouth. Best bet for local fishing is to drift strips of founder belly slowly along the bottom.

For fast summer saltwater action try bluefishing with flyrods. This is fast becoming a new and exciting way to catch bluefish from boats and shore.

FROM THE KITCHEN

by JOAN PINKHAM

Chocolate lovers will have their fantasies realized on August 25th, "Chocolate Day." Everyone with a passion for things chocolate can indulge in an orgy of baking for the Women's Board Contest, a new competition devised for the Marshfield Fair. There will be prizes for entrants and you can study the rules and regulations in their premium book which you can pick up at the fairgrounds' office or your local library. Victory is sweet and so is this recipe which will give you an idea of the sort of creation that has withstood the test of time. It has been in Jean Kostik's family for years - ever since her Aunt Tresa Datson created it and I discovered it in "Chocolatier," the new magazine devoted to chocolate delights. This cake is moist, keeps well and is that old-fashioned reddish color.

DEVIL'S FOOD CAKE

3 squares unsweetened chocolate
1 C. cold water
2 C. sugar
1/2 C. vegetable shortening
2 eggs
2 C. all-purpose flour
1/2 C buttermilk
1 Tsp. each baking soda and salt

Grease and flour a 13x9x2" pan, or three 8" cake pans. In a small saucepan, bring chocolate and cold water to a boil. Remove from heat and stir to melt the chocolate. Set aside. In a large bowl, cream together sugar, shortening and one of the eggs until light and fluffy. Beat in remaining egg. Add flour alternately with the chocolate, beginning and ending with the flour. Add buttermilk, baking soda and salt. Mix well. Divide batter among prepared pans and bake for 25 to 30 minutes in 325 degree oven for the 8" pans or 40 to 45 minutes for the rectangular pan, until a toothpick inserted in the center comes out clean. Cool on a rack for a least 10 minutes and unmold the cake. Allow to cool completely. Top with your favorite frosting.

Recipes that withstand the test of time are invariably good, as with the above and when they come from far-away places, it's usually because someone made a point of asking for a copy of the recipe to bring home for the enjoyment of others. It's because Susan Mclagan liked this salad that it has travelled a long-long way from Alberta, Canada to find its way into this column. When she was waiting on tables while in college this was a favorite dish and she asked the chef for a copy of this summertime salad called

HAWAIIAN SALAD

3 C. sour cream
3 C. sweetened coconut
3 cans drained mandarin oranges
3 cans (medium-sized) pineapple chunks, drained
3 C. small marshmallows

Mix. Allow several hours to chill in fridge.

Proof positive of recipes so tried and true that they are passed around among good cooks is the following which I received from Rose McGee. While reading her note telling of her recovery from recent surgery, a recipe card fell out of the envelope. A quick glance was enough to give me a jolt, for it was printed in my late father's beautiful script. So many people have asked my mother for this recipe that Rose must have been one of them. Though mother just had her 90th birthday, young and old alike always leave her kitchen, clutching a little bag of these

SCOTCH SHORTBREADS

1 C. butter
1/2 C. granulated sugar
2 1/2 C. flour

Method: Cream butter and sugar. Stir in flour. Chill for one hour. Roll on floured board 1/4" thick. Cut with cookie cutter. Bake 25-30 minutes, 300 degree oven on cookiesheet till lightly browned. Makes two dozen. (Note: part of the fun for the children has always been nibbling around the halved maraschino cherry with which mother decorates each of her cookies.)

America's hometown, for better or worse

Plymouth's pretty.

Now, don't carry on about the tourist part and the negative points of view. There's something of a sibling rivalry between towns like these that are so close. There is the common ocean and the uncommon waterfront, lots of nuances that make the towns compete rather than compliment one another.

But I had occasion to run there last week on an errand. And though I didn't tour Plymouth, I appreciated it.

Who wouldn't that day, you might say, sun out for the first time with its full bloomers on, flowers bending slightly and the hot haze over the bay that promises a sizzler when you're due for one.

And it made me feel better about our traffic. No matter how horrendous the traffic gets near those infamous places in town — where left turns are impossible, Plymouth's got it worse.

That exit off Rte. 3 to their 44 makes the expressway look great. I think Rte. 139 is simply a place to sit quietly if dangerously until I see Plymouth's exit to Rte. 44.

Probably a lot of bright people had great solutions to that hazardous section if they'd only lived to tell about 'em.

There are, though, things in Plymouth I'd love in my town. I'd like tables outside restaurants, for example, and those circular concrete bench affairs that are friendly yet attractive. I'd be happy to have those if I couldn't have Hingham's benches and flower pots.

And Plymouth's Main Street, whatever they're calling it otherwise, has hometown flair. The parking meters still take pennies, nickels and dimes. That's historic. The sidewalks have extra expansive space with swirling brick design in places.

Most of the time when I've driven by Plymouth's harbor and waterfront, I didn't get to see the view because of the cars. It is, after all, as the fire trucks say "America's Hometown."

I say, go for it. That's an enormous responsibility, especially if it means your town fathers have to spend their administrations making sure no one chips The Rock or puts a vessel of dubious distinction, like Hitler's, in the harbor.

The distaff side of being a major tourist attraction is that tourists almost always get in the way of the attractions. When I've made my way to the little Mayflower ship, so absorbed was I in the intriguing and seemingly one-of-a-kind summer people I failed to take in the history implicit in the historic (replica) Mayflower. But I was impressed at how short the bunks were.

There are the gift shops and the Indian crafts, or represented as such, never mind the ice cream cones every one carries in the summer along the waterfront. There is the tiny Pilgrim homestead there on the waterfront and the once in a lifetime chance to buy cups and saucers, plates, lobsters or key chains that say Plymouth, Massachusetts on them.

But when the tourists aren't looking that area is open to view. It's lovely. There are the fishing boats. And there is great parking in Plymouth. I consider that a hallmark of a great town. Try seeing Boston with a car as a mode of transportation. First you can't get in. Then if you manage to do that, you can't get out of the car 'cause there's no legal place to leave it. But for that matter there's much more adventure in Boston than in Plymouth.

Most of us in this area live in towns that qualify as 'summer places.' I excuse from that responsibility Stoughton or Plympton, even though they have loosely been called South Shore.

This summer there's a lot of hoopla in Plymouth because it is the 300th anniversary of the county for which that shire town is named. I concede the natural splendor of Plymouth as well as my town, simply on the principal of its importance.

I envy its traffic. There are enough left turns here we can't make from Memorial through Labor Day.

But Plymouth is pretty. It's appealing. Its center of town is neither malled to death nor boutiqued beyond the pocketbook. A nice balance it has, of classy crafts, of charm, of the good stuff and the approachables. There are wealthy people in Plymouth and there are not.

It is part of our environs. We share its heritage. When the Pilgrims found it, we had but a short period of time before our towns were discovered and settled as being precisely what some people wanted out of their entire lives.

Still I was thinking. Here we are so close and but for an appointment that caused me to interrupt the day to drive there for an hour or so, I'd have missed a perfectly pleasant privilege. Lunch, I had, on a brick terrace in the open sun. View, there was of people passing without pressing on one another. Respite, I thought, for a usual pace in a pretty place called Plymouth.

The woman with whom I had lunch said, "Do you do this all the time?" And I asked her what . . . all the time . . . "On the run," she said. Not today, I told her, not with America's hometown and the summer salad. No tourist, maybe. But a peerless appreciator.

MUSINGS

☐ Terrorists and hijackers, who can make world powers quake with anger, frustration and even fear, make a mockery of these words spoken by President Woodrow Wilson: "If we cannot now end our differences, at least we can make the world safe for diversity."

☐ I didn't say he was dumb. I merely said he thought it would improve our trade balance if we banned the import of French fried potatoes.

☐ Ann Boleyn lost her head over King Henry VIII. Reminds me that good women are hard to remember. For example, Henry VIII had six wives. One was naughty Ann Boleyn. Can you name any of the others?

☐ It's hard to get anyone to clean windows, but it's easy to find windows that clean people. Go to any racetrack.

☐ In pursuit of trivia: a peanut is a legume, not a nut, and bamboo is a grass, not a tree. Class dismissed.

☐ What goes up must come down, right? Gardeners agree, but they also think that what goes down must come up.

☐ When fellow congressmen posed a difficult question, John Randolph evaded it by saying: "Sir, that is a question, and I never answer questions."

☐ Putting cooked foods in the refrigerator before they cool can add two percent to your electric bill. Leave the dish out for about 20 minutes.

☐ Voltaire proclaimed that we live in the best of all possible worlds; a pessimist fears this is true.

☐ Virtue does not consist so much in abstaining from vice, as in not having a desire for it. And as Mark Twain said, "Be virtuous and you will be eccentric." George Bernard Shaw's comment: "Virtue is insufficient temptation."

☐ Leo Buscaglia thinks that apathy, not hate, is the opposite of love.

The Cohasset carillon . . .

"It was developed before the time of clocks," he said. "It was used to mark the time of day for church and for the market, and it was used to send signals. It developed from one or two bells when the idea of casting and tuning bells was realized. The bells are a combination of 80 percent copper and 20 percent tin. They are tuned to harmonize with the other bells. They are stationery, and they don't swing."

The summer recitals began in 1924 when Kamiel Lefevere was the church carilloneur. Since then a recital has been held every summer Sunday afternoon between 4 and 5 p.m. This summer's schedule consists of: June 30, George Matthew, Jr., Stamford Conn.; July 7, Andrew Wagemans, Tienen, Belgium; July 14, Beverly Buchanan, Bloomfield Hills, Mich.; July 21, James R. Lawson, New York City, N.Y.; July 28, Carolyn Reiser, Jacksonville, Fla.; Aug. 4, Sally Slade Warner, Andover, Mass.; Aug. 11, Daniel Kehoe, Hartford, Conn.; Aug. 18, Frank Pechin Law, Valley Forge, Pa.; Aug. 25, Richard M. Watson, Cincinnati, Ohio; Sept. 1, George Matthew, Jr., Stamford, Conn.; Sept. 8, Janet Dundore, Whitemarsh, Pa., and Sept. 15, Sally Slade Warner, Andover, Mass.

George Matthew began to near the end of his recital. From the tower of the church the familiar strains of the Kansas City Rag rang out, only this time the jazzy tune was played on the reverberating bells rather than on the typical piano. As soon as he finished this piece he began his finale, the National Anthem.

On the other side of the pond, in front of a bench, four of the listeners stood at attention. Some others across the way followed suit.

The music faded from the tower, collapsible chairs were folded, legs were stretched out and people began slowly making their way back to the tents to catch the last few moments of the festival.

THE NO-COMPROMISE SOLUTION TO BUYING AN AUTOMOBILE.

When you lay out a substantial amount of money for an automobile, you should get what you want. Buying a car shouldn't be an exercise in making sacrifices.
Saab doesn't ask you to give up anything.
Superb handling and performance have made the Saab 900 one of Europe's most respected sports sedans. But that performance is delivered in return for little gas* and less fuss by a reliable two-liter engine. And unlike many other high-performance cars, the Saab is perfectly at home in the workaday world. Four adults can travel comfortably all day in a Saab, or the rear two seats can be folded flat to add extra space for cargo.
We'll be happy to tell you about a lot of other features that you won't have to give up when you buy a Saab.
SAAB
The most intelligent car ever built.
*Saab 900 5 speed EPA est. 31 mpg. Re-estimated highway mpg. Use estimated mpg for comparison only. Mileage varies with speed, trip length and weather. Actual highway mileage will probably be less.

SEMASS recovery plans forge ahead

By Karen Cubie

Cohasset should know if it has been accepted into the SEMASS program by the last week in August, said Donald DeMichele, chairman of the Landfill Study Committee.

"Everything indicates to us that we'll be accepted," DeMichele said. "The towns signed with SEMASS wanted to make sure they were covered. We believe a lot of the towns asked for excess capacity to cover themselves. During the next two months they will be identifying exactly how much trash they do generate. We believe there will be room for us. Selectmen have the authority to execute a contract with SEMASS without another town meeting."

Cohasset is now the community with second priority on the waiting list. Dighton holds the first position. Each of the waiting list communities can contribute 100 tons per day if accepted.

"The plant will begin accepting, burning, and converting the trash into electricity in mid to late 1988," DeMichele said.

The last topographical survey indicated a 13 year life left in Cohasset's landfill.

"We should have no problem before the plant's completion," he said. "The last survey before that one indicated a nine year life. We have somewhere between nine and 13 years left in our landfill."

Five thousand dollars was appropriated at an April 10 town meeting for the purpose of finalizing a basic design for a transfer station to be built on a landfill.

"This is a necessity for SEMASS," DeMichele said. "We need to transfer trash from Cohasset to Rochester or Braintree."

The Landfill Study Committee is presently trying to determine what method of transportation from the transfer station to the SEMASS plant would be most cost-effective.

"We could use compactors and huge bins," DeMichele said. "Then we would pick up bins and take them away. We could also dump everything into a tractor-trailor, cover it, and take it off. Tractor-trailor equipment is more expensive, but the transportation would be cheaper.

"There's a break-even point," he continued, "depending on how many loads we actually shift."

Senator William Golden claims SEMASS is not an adequate solution to local waste problems.

"I think right now SEMASS is the only alternative available to Cohasset," he said. "That's very unfortunate. It may be the result of the failure of communities to sit back and realize their long term needs."

DeMichele feels that SEMASS is Cohasset's best alternative.

"From a resource recovery standpoint, I think it's the best thing we can do for the state," he said. "However, I feel that unfortunately SEMASS is the only option available to us. Our state has not done a good enough job on helping some of these areas build resource recovery stations quickly enough.

"I'm starting to see this administration respond to some of the town's dilemmas," he said. "For Cohasset, it's important that we move quickly.

Lily Pond development draws environment objections

By Jim Whelan

Concerned residents and town officials gathered at last week's Planning Board meeting to protect Lily Pond from becoming the site of a residential development.

They urged the board to deny an application by Rosenberg and Britt to build Lily Pond Estates because the plans do not protect the town's drinking water from pollutants.

The Planning Board members also denied an application for a revised plan to develop Wheelwright Farm, and considered an application by Webb-Norfolk Company for an addition to their facility on Rte. 3A.

William E. Baird, a resident of Redgate Lane, described the plans for Lily Pond Estates as "woefully inadequate for the protection of the drinking water."

Baird, an engineer, explained that one gallon of gasoline dropped into the pond would destroy 180 million gallons of drinking water.

Nancy W. Connolly, a resident of the Lily Pond area, told the board she and her neighbors have a real respect of the reservoir and its environment, something the developer's plans are lacking.

She noted there has been a decrease in the number of lily pads on the pond's surface recently, and an increase in the amount of sledge.

Water commissioner Peter Pratt said his board would prohibit the construction of the project by an injunction if necessary. Pratt said large outcrops of granite ledge in the ground make proper drainage of the area extremely difficult.

There is not enough passage to channel pollutants before reaching the pond, he reported. In addition to the drainage problems, the Board of Water Commissioners is concerned with the project's sewer system, said Pratt.

A spokesman for Rosenberg and Britt said each unit would have a septic tank adhering to state and local regulations. The site design will eliminate the possibility of pollutants creeping into the town's reservoir, said the developer.

The developer hired enginneering consultants IEP Inc., of Northboro, to conduct a water quality report. A spokesman for the engineering consultants told the board the site design includes a catch basin into which runoff from the development will flow. This basin will be protected from the pond by a high roadway, shielding the pond from pollutants.

Christine Basset, chairman of the Planning Board, said the main concern is to get an assurance from the developer the drinking water will not be threatened in any way. But at the meeting the developer was unable to give that assurance. A decision should be expected in the coming weeks.

The revised plans for Wheelwright Farm were

Sewer Commission still waiting

The Hingham Sewer Commission is still waiting for the state Water Resources Authority's answer to their request to open the town's septic waste disposal facility off Route 3A.

"I called and they said that they are evaluating it," Commission Chairman John Brandt said. "They will make a preliminary decision next week, and then it goes to their Board of Directors. They have to vote to either accept or reject it."

According to Brandt, Hingham has not had any serious problems yet.

"It's been a dry spring and summer," he said. "That helps alot."

Hingham was not allowed to connect into the WRA system previously because of Boston Harbor pollution.

"It's officially against our permit from the MDC to enter the WRA system with our sewage connection," Brandt said. "We've appealed to the WRA to waive that. They claim keeping Hingham out of the system alleviates the Boston Harbor situation."

Brandt disagrees.

"Hingham would be a very minor source of any pollution that would go up there," he said. "We would not add an awful lot more.

"As long as we could go to Hull there was no point in arguing. Now that we can't, what are we supposed to do?"

The Cohasset Health Board claims that the shut-off has caused few real problems.

"We've had nothing more than normal," a spokesperson for the department said. "We've made several calls to other towns to see if they could accept us but so far no one can. Nothing dire has happened, but we are trying to make emergency preparations."

Representative Mary Jeanette Murray is concerned by the situation.

"I'm very disappointed," she said, "even more

Strait's Pond treated for algae

Strait's Pond will be treated for algae on Tuesday, July 18th, State Representative Mary Jeanette Murray (R) 3rd Plymouth District has announced.

"The pesticide to be used is aquapthall and endopthall both of which break down quickly but are very effective," Murray said.

The DEQE has also urged adults in the area of Strait's Pond to keep children they see in the area away from the operation.

"There should not be any domestic use or irrigation of the Pond for seven days. Swimming is prohibited for 24 hours and no fish from the Pond should be eaten for three days after the pesticides have been placed in the Pond", Rep. Murray also said.

"If Tuesday, the 18th is too hot a day and the water in the Pond is hot, the pesticides will not be used that day," Rep. Murray concluded.

Lothrop House mortgage

Spurred by an $8,500 "challenge grant" from The South Shore Playhouse Associates, the Cohasset Historical Society has launched a drive to match the grant and pay off a remaining $17,000 mortgage on the Lothrop House on Summer Street.

In a letter to members and friends of the Society, the Board of Directors wrote it has been almost 10 years since the Society purchased the Summer Street porperty.

"In the intervening years," directors said, "many hours have been spent by a dedicated building committee and other volunteers in planning, fund-raising, and supervising the transformation of a run-down property into a valuable one-of-a-kind 1823 jewel."

The directors noted many donations large and small have made the transformation possible, including a low-interest mortgage from Cohasset Savings Bank. Two grants of $5,000 each have reduced the mortgage to $17,000.

"Now we have a rare opportunity to wipe out the remaining balance," the directors said. "The South Shore Playhouse Associates, Inc., owners and operators of the Music Circus and already our principal benefactor, has recently voted a challenge grant of $8,500. By matching this grant the Society will be debt-free and able to apply the interest changes to other expenses."

The directors accepted the challenge and believe if members and friends make the effort , the grant can be matched by Labor Day.

Art Center second story approval

The Cohasset Conservation Commission approved the South Shore Art Center's plans to construct a second story, and to extend an existing building on 115 Ripley Rd. toward Pleasant St., at their July 16 meeting.

The South Shore Art Center's request for a determination of applicability was approved with the condition that sand or other pervious material be placed beneath the proposed terrace area of the building.

The planned construction will take place on property presently containing an auto body shop.

"It seems the overall effects of the planned (structure) are more positive than what is there now," Commission member Maki commented.

The Commission approved a notice of intent filed by William Last to construct a single family house with a concrete foundation and wooden superstructure at lot #1 on Forest Ave. The notice was approved with the condition that all debris be cleared out of the wetlands, and all construction materials kept away from the area.

The Commission decided to deny a request from Glenn A Pratt, a trustee of 431 Beechwood Trust, to fill a lot on Riverview Drive.

An area of wetlands on the property had been filled without the Commission's approval when the Health Board required the Trust to construct a new sewage system.

The Commission agreed to draw up an order of conditions stating the material be removed, the area be restored to its original contours, and the original plant life be replicated as closely as possible.

with the MDC when they will not allow them to dump. There's someplace we have to put the stuff. I'm concerned that people won't clean up their tanks, and that haulers will find places to dump that they shouldn't. It's a serious problem."

Senator Bill Golden claims that the crisis would have occurred sooner or later.

"(Hull's action) was well founded as a result of a study on their plant," he said. "The plant can apparently handle only 10,000 gallons a day. It's a problem that would have come along eventually.

"It's a regional problem and the Hull plant is not designed to meet regional needs."

Golden is scheduling a meeting between the towns in his district (Hingham, Cohasset, and Hull), the WRA, and representatives from the Division of Water Pollution Control.

"It's an open meeting," he said, "anyone can come. We're in the process of scheduling it right now.

"We have a regional sewer problem and a regional septage problem," he continued. "I think it requires a plan in which we coordinate the efforts of Hull, Hingham, and Cohasset in a manner which the state actively encourages.

"If we fail to complete such a plan, it is going to cost us economically, environmentally, and maybe even from a public health standpoint because we'll condemn those towns to a repeated and continuing series of crisis."

Salvation Army

The Salvation Army is asking local residents to help keep their bright red drop-boxes in "giving order" by taking steps to prevent the donation boxes from being overloaded with items.

In recent months the generosity of the public has exceeded The Army's ability to quickly process the donated goods. Adding to the increase in donated items to The Salvation Army is the reduced number of available boxes from other charitable groups.

The Salvation Army asks civic minded citizens to help out by giving only usable items and to take note of the capacity of the drop-off boxes in the area. If the boxes are full, then people should hold onto donated goods until the box has been emptied.

By following this simple rule, the boxes will be in good "giving order" and items will be safe from the elements and vandals.

The Salvation Army has four Adult Rehabilitation Centers that oversee the collection of donated clothes, furniture, bric-a-brac and other items. In the Boston area, call 231-0803. In the Brockton area, call 586-1187. In Worcester and vicinity, call 799-0520. From the Springfield area, call 785-1921.

Massachusetts coalition wants a seat belt law

By Karen Cubie

The Massachusetts Seat Belt Coalition has been running a telephone campaign to convince state legislators that Massachusetts residents do support a proposed mandatory seat belt law.

"The problem we're having is that 65 percent of people in the state are in favor of the law, and can't believe that people can be opposed to it," said Coalition President Nat Shulman.

"As a result they're passive about calling their legislators. It's a silent majority and we're trying to get that majority to speak out. According to surveys, 80 percent of the people would observe the law."

New Bedford Representative Roger R. Goyette is opposed to the law.

"I'm not against seat belts," he said. "I just think they give people a false sense of security. People think they can drive 80 to 90 miles per hour in small foreign cars, and they'll be safe just because they have a seat belt on."

Goyette, however, was strongly in favor of the Massachusetts law requiring all children under the age of five to buckle up.

"I just lost a bill to put restraining belts on school buses," he said. "I co-sponsored and passed the child restraint law."

Goyette feels that the whole Registry of Motor Vehicles program should be scrapped.

"We had better driving tests 50 years ago than we do today," he said. "People are not trained to maneuver a car under emergency conditions."

He claims that rather than insuring cars, all drivers should be insured before they can receive a driver's license.

"Don't blame the automobile," he said. "If someone is killed by a gun, the operator is the criminal, not the gun. A person is responsible for his actions."

Goyette claims that air bags are a better solution.

Coalition President Nat Shulman said car occupants have a 75 percent better chance of surviving an accident when wearing a belt.

"You do have that case where the person is thrown out of the car and happens to land okay," he said.

Shulman, a Hingham resident, became involved with the seat belt issue when one of his neighbor's sons was seriously injured and another killed in two separate accidents.

"Neither of the boys were wearing seat belts," Shulman said. "This rocked me. I did a survey and was appalled at the number of kids not wearing belts."

Shulman did a survey of 600 high school students in Hingham and surrounding communities. He discovered that less than 15 out of the 600 students surveyed wear belts.

Mrs. Inta Hall, the neighbor whose personal tragedy got Mr. Shulman involved, is now vice-president of the coalition.

"People keep calling it a rights issue," she said. "It's a public health issue. There are a number of people who sustain injuries. The state has to take care of them. Seat belts decrease death and injuries. It's about time we use prevention. It's just one more move for public safety."

Mrs. Hall has been in charge of educating Hingham about seat belts. Hingham was declared the Model Community for seat belt education between February of 1984 and '85.

"The overall usage of belts in the community at the beginning of the program was 22 percent," Mrs. Hall said. "At the end of March, our usage was up to 28 percent. For the amount of energy and effort poured into the project I was disappointed. Education alone was not the answer.

"We did better with our statistics at the High School level," she said. "We began a four percent usage rate. The highest rate we reached was 43 percent after I spent a whole day speaking to classes. The latest figure is 36 percent."

The proposed law has already been passed by the Committee on Pubic Safety, and has been faced with little organized resistance.

"There would be no insurance implications with this law," Shulman said. "But insurance will drop automatically because it will save lives."

Representative Mary Jeannette Murray supports the legislation, although she was previously against it.

"It's very rare that I will support anything

AN ATTRACTIVE NUISANCE

An "attractive nuisance" is one in which some object or condition exists on a property owner's land that will obviously attract children into a dangerous situation. If such situation exists, the property owner will be held liable for the damages resulting to any child who is attracted by the object or condition and subsequently injured. In such cases, even if the child is a trespasser, the courts impose liability upon the property owner. The courts follow the premise that a child is not old enough or mature enough to understand the danger involved in trespassing. He therefore cannot make reasonable judgements about the safety or lack of safety involved in investigating the "attractive nuisance". An example may be an unprotected excavation.

The key to success is approaching any problem from an informed point of view. Accordingly, today it is becoming increasingly popular to establish periodic legal reviews well before any crises develop. Thus, in this fashion, one is able to understand one's rights, responsibilities and particular areas of legal exposure. Seat belt support mounts . . .

mandatory," she said. "Several things changed my mind -- an accident in Cohasset where two 13 year old girls died, and the results we have received from New York since the seat belt legislation passed there. It's amazing the number of lives that have been saved since the mandatory law went into effect. Over 500 lives saved in one year. This has proved to me that you can save lives and reduce insurance premiums in the end, too.

"The reduction of the fine also helped me to change my mind," she continued. "I felt that the original fine was too stiff. It's now been reduced to $15."

Senator William Golden also supports the legislation.

"I was one of the first to come out in support of it," he said. "I've spoken out for it in the Committee and on the floor."

Golden's wife, Paula, is responsible for his strong stance on the issue.

"My wife was a Deputy Registrar of Motor Vehicles, and chief legal counsel for the Registry," he said. "Every morning over coffee she made me very aware of the tragedies that occur because of the lack of use of seat belts."

Golden has worked closely with Hingham officials, and he claims the support for the law is strong in Hingham.

Golden claims the counter argument stating the mandatory law would infringe on an individual's rights doesn't have substance."

"You don't have a right to drive an automobile --you have a license to drive," he said. "You are subject to the laws that apply. On an airplane you have to buckle up, and no one complains about that."

Senator Golden believes the law will pass this year.

"I'm confident it will," he said. "We have a lot of strong support and we're really pushing the bill."

Sewer commissioners respond to state letter

By Karen Cubie

The Cohasset Board of Sewer Commissioners drew up its response to reservations raised by the Division of Water Pollution Control on Cohasset's proposed Supplemental Facilities Plan.

"The decision as to whether to sewer or repair on-site was based, as the Division recommends, on consideration of technical and environmental factors as well as cost," the commissioners' letter said.

"If cost alone were the deciding factor. the recommended sewer service area would have been extremely limited."

The commissioners added the DWPC's insistence on a ten year life for a properly sized, designed, and maintained system is not supported by research.

"We would appreciate knowing the basis for the Division's figure," the commissioners wrote.

The letter added it was premature to call proposed techniques for on-site rehabilitation unacceptable until a detailed evaluation was done because the technique used would be "highly site specific."

"A major reason for the outlines of measures. . . was to demonstrate that there are a range of alternatives available to deal with each specific site constraint or variance requirement," the commissioners said. "If any specific technique is 'unacceptable' in a specific situation, there are other alternatives. It would be helpful if the Division could indicate what techniques would be 'unacceptable' in any situation, and why."

The commissioners claimed that the cost-effectiveness of gravity effluent sewers is clear.

"Rather than rigidly adhering to inappropriate standards, we hope the Division will welcome the opportunity to help develop standards for a cost saving technology that can benefit towns throughout the Commonwealth," the letter stated.

The funding for the plan is still undergoing a review by the EPA. If the EPA's conclusion supports the state's assumptions, the plan will be subject to review and revision by the town.

EXPLAINING SUBLUXATION

Subluxation is the term used to describe a misalignment of bones resulting in nerve pressure or irritation. Subluxations of the vertebrae of the spine are, by far, the most common type. The slightest misalignment can produce nerve pressure and irritation. This causes an improper communication of vital nerve impulses to the organs, cells and tissues of the body. The greater the misalignment, the greater is the possibility of its more severely affecting a nerve and causing more discomfort and pain. Are you suffering from headaches, stiffness of the neck, pain between the shoulders, backache, pain in the arms or legs, numbness in hands or feet or general nervousness? If so, you may be suffering from one of the eight danger signals that indicate possible nerve pressure or irritation due to subluxation.

Such subluxations cause a disruption or interference in the body's communication network. THe signals from the brain to all parts of the body along the spine, the communication system of your body, is interrupted and thus "malfunction" may occur. In such situations most any part of the body can be affected. With chiropractic applications such points of interference may be eliminated and the natural healing process allowed to resume. For such relief and assistance call COHASSET CHIROPRACTIC OFFICE, 760 Chief Justice Cushing Hwy., Suite 12, today. Tel. 383-1211, 1214. Daily by appt.

HINT:

It is estimated that as much as 90 percent of the world's population suffers from subluxation of varying degrees.

Vo-Tech to return funds to Cohasset

By Karen Cubie

The South Shore Vocational School Committee voted to recertify the 1985-86 Budget at the July 10 meeting, and return$70,000.00 to member towns. The recertification hinges upon unanimous approval from the member towns on a deferred payment loan proposed for building and grounds improvements.

The Committee originally budgeted the $70,000.00 for gradual building and loan improvements. Some Committee members felt the money should be set aside into a surplus fund.

"If the loan goes through, in my opinion, the need for the original $70,000.00 does not exist," said Hanson member James F. McDermott. "You are appropriating for something non-existant. It isnot at all appropriate. It is a moot situation."

Whitman had refused to approve the loan if the $70,000.00 was not returned to the towns. After the promise of recertification, Whitman voted unanimously at a special town meeting on July 11 to approve the loan.

Robert Molla of Norwell was elected Chairman of the Committee after incumbant Walter Easttey declined nomination. Whitman representative Lloyd Patriquinn was elected Vice-President. Cohasset member Dave Chittim thanked Easttey for his service on behalf of the board.

Secretary-Treasurer Robert Kelley announced the board has recieved a $52,935.00 check as a fire insurance settlement. Kelley proposed the money be set aside, and access to the fund only be allowed by vote of the Committee. Kelley suggested the money be used to replace a lawnmower and other equipment the school needs. The board voted unanimously to encumber this fund.

Committee member Dave Chittim announced the completion of an evaluation of Dr. Clifford Easton, Supt - Director of the School.

"As a general comment, the members of the [evaluation] committee feel that the Superintendant is a strong, innovative leader," Chittim said. "Many strong points were presented attesting to many hours of work, high integrity, stamina, etc. The clear understanding he has of Vo-Tech High Schools is evident."

The committee did not discuss the evaluation because Dr. Easton had not had a chance to examine it.

The committee voted to adopt "Holt-Geometry", a new geometry book written at a 4.5 reading level, as a new text book.

Scituate member Joan DeGeorge voted against the acceptance.

"I would like to put it on the record that I am not happy with a reading level of 4.5 on the high school level," she said.

The Committee approved the hiring of Joseph Lebherz as a full time Marine Tech Teacher with a salary of $22,650.00. Lebherz acted as a substitute teacher for the school this year. The Committee also approved the reappointment of Paul Blanchard as the Varsity Soccer Coach, and the appointment of George Clemmey as the Yearbook Advisor.

Superitendant Easton announced teacher Mary Elizabeth Guilfoyle has received enough graduate credits to achieve the highest column level in the Vo-Tech contract.

The committee unanimously granted Supt. Easton authorization to receive bids on the retiling of the floor in room 105.

"Twelve or more tiles are damaged and lifting," Dr. Easton said. "It could become a serious safety problem. To my knowledge, the floors haven't been retiled in 23 years. This will be an epidemic now due to the age of the building."

Keep the landfill control to the towns, officials say

By Judith Denzer Cooper

Town officials do not want to give up local control of their sanitary landfills. This message was given to members of the Legislature's Committee on Natural Resources at a public hearing Wednesday, July 10, at Marshfield Town Hall.

State Rep. Frank Hynes (Marshfield-Scituate) chaired the meeting which brought state representatives Steve Angelo (D-Saugus) and Henri Rauchenbach (R-Brewster) to hear testimony from citizens and town officials in the southeastern area of the state.

The Committee has held five hearings in their effort to assess public support for proposed legislation that would have the State lend money to communities to help bring individual landfills up to new and safer standards.

DEQE CRITICIZED

Although many of those who testified mentioned different priorities or problems they had with the proposed legislation, the one point that all protested was the power that would be given to the State Department of Environmental Quality Engineering (DEQE).

Under the new law DEQE would be able to overrule a town's decision to allow or prohibit a sanitary landfill. Donald Gibson, Chair of the Marshfield Board of Health and several other speakers described past problems experienced by local officials in trying to work with DEQE.

The commentors indicated that DEQE was "insensitive, indifferent and slow to act." Gibson added, "They don't answer phone calls and when we had the hydrogen sulfide problem (at a local landfill) we had a constant battle with DEQE."

Russell Silva, newly appointed commissioner of DEQE, attended the meeting, but did not answer Gibson's criticisms directly. Silva did make a short presentation on the role DEQE would play if the bill (House 6258) becomes law.

Silva said a primary objective of the new law would be to survey old landfills. There are 119 landfills in Massachusetts that were closed between 1950 and 1960. Silva said materials would be examined and tests done to see if water leaving these sites (leachate) was carrying any harmful chemicals.

Silva added that the second emphasis of the proposed law would be to study landfills that are presently active. These sites would be tested and either closed or brought up to new safety standards.

The third concept addressed by the bill would look at future solutions to the problem of solid waste disposal. Silva said, "The area of individual towns carrying their own problems will no longer work. We need 10 new regional landfills."

WHO PAYS FOR CLEAN-UP?

Gibson and several other speakers also rejected the idea of State loans to help towns improve their landfills. Gibson suggested that towns needed grants of money and other incentives to solve their solid waste problems.

Stephen Shareck, representing the Greater New Bedford Regional Refuse Committee, spoke against several aspects of the bill as well as the fact that money was being loaned to the towns rather than given in grants. Shareck also said the bill was an attempt to circumvent proposition 2½. At this point Representative Angelo said to Shareck, "In other words you want State money but you don't want State control," and in reference to prop. 2½, Angelo challenged Shareck to identify one point in the bill that mandated changes by a community. Angelo said the State would be required to pay for such changes under prop. 2½. Shareck admitted he could not point to any mandates in the bill.

Selectman chair James Robinson spoke to two issues raised by the legislation. He said, "I commend Governor Dukakis for initiating this effort to improve landfills, but I feel strongly about local control." Robinson objected to any legislation that would allow the State to overrule a town's decisions to open or expand a landfill. He also said the towns must depend on the State's technical assistance and he hoped that past problems with DEQE could be resolved.

Although no decisions were made at the hearing, the legislators commented on the interest and concern shown by the approximately 50 people who attended the hearing. Hynes said this is an issue that cannot be ignored and he referred to comments made by Thomas McShane of the Department of Environmental Management (DEM) to prove his point.

McShane told the hearing that Massachusetts generates six million tons of solid waste per year. And that 84 percent of this material ends up in local sanitary landfills. As many as 40 percent of local landfills may be potential danger to their town's water supply. In fact, seven Massachusetts communities have recently lost their water supply due to contamination.

McShane said the State must seek solutions for immediate local problems but planners should also be looking to long-term solutions which would change the way communities handle solid waste. He proposed that an appropriate solution would have 25 percent of materials recycled (glass, metal and paper), 50 percent converted to energy in resource recovery programs and 25 percent deposited in landfills (ash from recovery and other non-combustibles).

James Miller, director of the Bureau of Solid Waste, brought one bright spot to the evening's testimony . Miller said that the "Bottle Bill" has reduced the amount of trash in Massachusetts by five percent. According to McShane's figures that means 300,000 tons of material that is not being added to local sanitary landfills each year.

denied because it was not submitted as a "fully integrated package."

The original plans, submitted by Cohasset developer Wayne Sawchuck, were approved by the board some months ago. However, the whole project was sold to Jeslyn Associates of South Weymouth, which significantly altered the "footprints" and the architecture of the plans.

John Jack Rodolph, a spokesman for the South Weymouth firm, said the design was altered to "keep in the tradition of Cohasset." The original plans called for the construction of contemporary style buildings. The new plans are for Cape Cod colonial style houses.

Rodolph, who appeared frustrated by the board's action, said "the easiest thing would be to carry on with what Sawchuck had, but I did not like the design. It was not fully up to my expectations."

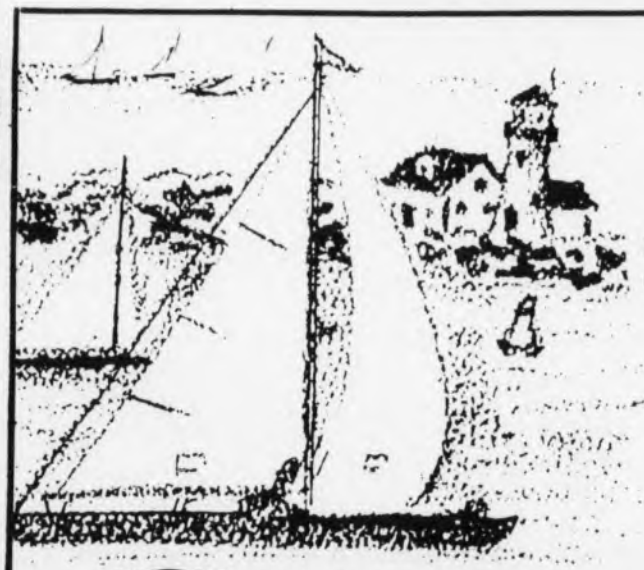
Rodolph's plans would result in the construction of 28 single units and seven duplexes. The Planning Board advised Rodolph to resubmit the plan and go through the entire application process again. That could take another 90 days for approval, noted the developer.

Webb-Norfolk

An application by the Webb-Norfolk Company to build an addition to its facility on Rte. 3A will be granted on the conditional approval of the Cohasset Fire Department

Fire Prevention Officer Captain Mark Trask said, "the building is a nightmare for the Cohasset Fire Department as far as getting in there, controlling the fire and containing loss."

The addition will shelter a diesel trailer truck cab. During the winter months the engine of the vehicle must remain on overnight, otherwise the cold weather prevents it from turning over in the morning. This presents a fire hazard.



Trask said the fire department has accepted a level of hazard at the facility and the addition increases that level. Therefore, the Fire Department "must step in" in examine the project, he said.

☐ Congratulations to Father Keohane, who celebrated his 40th anniversary recently . . . he was very low-key about the whole thing, and didn't want a big celebration. He surely deserves a grand round of applause to say the least.

☐ There's a new little gal on Surrey Drive, and she is a perfect baby! Molly is her name, and she was born on July third. Mon and Dad, Maureen and Ralph Beers are so happy, as is Molly's sister, Lexie.

☐ The town will certainly miss Assistant Town Accountant Kay Conte! After seeing her around the Town Hall office for six years. She practically seems "like a fixture".

Summer reading lists are available in the children's room.

☐ Sure has been a great summer for the beach! Speaking of Sandy Beach, we Cohassetites are very fortunate . . . we were one of the few beaches that were cleaned up after the recent storm that dumped tons of kelp and seaweed everywhere! Also one of the few that gets a thorough cleaning every morning, to keep it looking grand indeed.

☐ If we could only clean up the Red Tide with the same efficiency . . .

Summer steamy days

Things in Cohasset have already slowed down, as long, steamy days simmer. Sun bathers worshipping on our beloved Sandy Beach, windsurfers daring desperately as they glide along the harbor water.

Children beckoning weary moms to come to the cool water's edge, as brown-skinned youths lie passively in devotion to the sun, its warmth and a brilliant light allowing us to linger lazily.

There is nothing as comforting to young and old as summertime. We break free from the cold chain of household drudgery and the dreary office to winter, to the exhilarating inactivity of these long, hot days of the sun.

It's too hot to work, we cry in protest. So we play hookey from work; the house now contains an uneven surface of loose sand, the office papers are piling up without our devote attention. It's summertime. Let's not be a slave to work, but to the sun.

We are so lucky, we in Cohasset. A trip to the beach, to the pool, to the shade of the library, to the playfields of our schools. We just about have it all.

As we sit back and relax this week, as we will for many more, it's painful to think of the ones who live without. But there are, and always will be. There will always be barren, infertile lands and children seeking nourishment.

We need not feel guilty about the things we have. But we must not cast our eyes from those without. We must be ready to offer our support, and our prayers to those who desire them.

And we must be grateful for all we have, for our families, our homes, our hours of peaceful respite along the shores of Cohasset.

Remember always, there are those who will give. People like Eileen Mullaney, who will miss this splendid summer in Cohasset. She will be spending her June, July, and August in the midst of famine, disease and devastating drought. We will think of her, and her quest to help. And we are grateful.

It's the real thing

By Claire McDonough

"Kids," Fauna sighed. "They just don't seem to have the same idealism we did. It's downright embarassing. You can't even get a good sized group together for a demonstration any more."

She shook her head. "Embarrassing," she repeated.

Flora frowned. "I can't agree. Today's young people are as dedicated as any other generation. It's just that they focus differently."

Fauna frowned. "Yeah, differently. Like all of a sudden they're all conservatives, for heaven's sake. I couldn't believe my eyes when I caught Bambi reading the Wall Street Journal last week. She shoved it behind a cushion when she saw me coming, but I recognized the masthead."

Fauna rolled her eyes. "Where did I go wrong?" she asked the ceiling.

I patted her hand. "It may just be a phase she's going through. Like vegetarianism, or macrame."

Flora smiled brightly. "I think you're both making far too much of this. I know my daughter Fern is actively involved in any number of important causes. As a matter of fact, she's stopping by this afternoon to fill us in on her latest."

While we were indulging in a second round of Tab, the door burst open and Fern threw herself into a chair.

"Boy, am I exhausted," she moaned. "I've been at the dump collecting signatures all day. Tomorrow I'm assigned to work at Angelo's parking lot, and Monday and Tuesday I'll be holding a sign on Rte. 3A."

Flora beamed. "Didn't I tell you?" she asked us. "Now who says today's young people are apathetic?"

"I apologize," Fauna exclaimed. "Fern, you look positively exhausted."

"I am," Fern told her, "and I'm delighted to find the three of you together. You can sign this petition for me, and it'll save me two trips."

"I'll be delighted to," Fauna smiled. "Let me guess — I'll bet you're protesting world hunger."

Fern shook her head. "No. The rock stars of the world seem to have that under control. We're working on something that affects us right here in Massachusetts as well as having world-wide implications."

"You're doing something about the homeless issue!" I shouted. "And not a minute too soon, either. The problem has reached truly epidemic proportions."

"Wrong again," Fern replied. "Try another guess."

"I hope you're not going to demonstrate outside a nuclear power plant," Flora told her daughter. "You know how upset your father will be if he sees a picture of you chained to some gate."

"Look," Fern said, "I'm sure these are all worthwhile causes, but lots of people are already working on them. We must become spokesmen for a group whose rights have been trampled, whose needs have been ignored, whose freedom to choose has been undermined."

Fauna looked puzzled. "I'm afraid you've lost me," she admitted.

Fern flung her arms out dramatically. "They've changed the flavor of Coca Cola," she wailed.

"Well," she continued, "we're not going to take it. For years they told us the formula was a closely guarded secret. We believed them. We took the Pepsi challenge, and we passed it. We steeped ourselves in tradition. We followed the American dream.

"And now the corporate big boys are ready to toss it all away. They've taken the coke we've known, loved and been loyal to all our lives and thrown it on the scrap heap. After years of telling us they were giving us perfection, they're trying to sell us on something else.

"Well, it won't work. We'll fight them in the supermarkets. We'll fight them on the beaches. We'll hit them in the pocketbook where it really hurts."

"Wait a minute," I interjected. "I can understand how serious this issue is, but didn't I read that they're bringing back the original formula? They're going to call it 'Coke Classic' or something. You'll be able to choose between two coke flavors."

Fern glowered darkly. "Sure. Now that we've brought pressure on them they're starting to buckle. But we don't trust them any more. We won't relax our efforts till 'Coke Classic' starts showing up in vending machines."

"I think you're being unduly apprehensive," I told her. "The Coca Cola executives have taken to the media and they've promised to return the old coke. Surely you can trust them."

"Right," Fern said. "Just like you trusted that car dealer who sold you that widely advertised Edsel."

Flora, Fauna and I looked at each other. "This is too serious to take chances," Flora admitted.

"Where do we sign?"

Another viewpoint about So. Shore

Letter

To the Editor:

I read with interest your Mariner article about defining the South Shore (Judith Cooper). I must, however, take an opposing viewpoint.

Thirty and more years ago, the only towns in Plymouth County considered to be part of the South Shore were Hingham and Hull. Quincy, Braintree, Weymouth and perhaps Cohasset, completed the region. The criteria then seemed to be location on the coast south of Boston within an easy sail of the city and bordering on the inner or outer harbor. That entire area, for years back, has been referred to as the South Shore.

Witness, from among many, the following institutions of longstanding: South Shore Bank in Quincy, South Shore Bus Lines in Braintree, the South Shore Country Club in Hingham, South Shore Hospital in Weymouth, and, more recently, the South Shore Plaza on the Quincy-Braintree line.

I grew up "south of Quincy, east of Brockton and north of Bourne" about a dozen miles inland. Never were my towns included in the South Shore. People then thought Nantasket was the end of the South Shore. Towns like the Bridgewaters, Hanover, Pembroke and Middleboro never made such a claim. Even the coastal towns and villages at the time had no regional identity and used only their own names.

With the spread of population outward from Boston in the '50s and '60s real estate developers, builders and newcomers began gradually extending the name South Shore along the Plymouth County coast. Once the seaside towns were fairly settled, the appellation started woking its way inland. Even homes in Easton and Raynham have been advertised as being on the South Shore!

Granted that times change and regions expand, eastern Plymouth County is now safely in the South Shore. We did not, however, oust Quincy or the other original communities when we were welcomed to the group.

My question now is, "Where is the western boundary of the South Shore?" Or is it a situation of you are if you think you are?

State Sec. Murphy visits the area

State Sen. William Golden escorted Evelyn Murphy around his territory this week encouraging the cabinet member to invest in economic growth on the South Shore.

Murphy is Secretary of Economic Affairs and agrees, she said Monday, with Golden's thesis of providing economic development with environmental balance to protect the quality of life.

Particularly, Secretary Murphy has given attention to the people who were laid off work at General Dynamics. Her department provides training and relocating programs.

That extends to the Displaced Homemaker Programs. There are, she says, about 150,000 women who have lost support and a way of life through, often, a loss of mate. Last week Murphy's office announced $908,000 in grant money that will be used throughout the state to retrain and direct women to productive work. A satellite center of the Displaced Homemaker program will be in Marshfield, though no specific location has yet been announced.

Also coordinated and encouraged through her department is sponsorship of day-care centers through corporations. This program, said Golden and Murphy, enables a powerful work force of able and qualified women to work with their small children and be cared for through the employer.

Of the continuing transportation debate, one of the South Shore's more obvious needs for improvement, Golden said he supported another ramp entrance/exit for Rte. 3, to be located within or near the Marshfield Industrial Park.

The state official was on her third swing through this area in 12 months. Infusing balanced growth with the required planning is more challenging at this time, she said, because within the last year there were 160,000 new jobs, "an explosion that the state hasn't seen in employment since 1942."

What do the taxpayers get in return?

By Don Merrill

Commentary

Amid the glow and flush of prosperity in the commonwealth, the governor and legislature recently approved a record $8.8-billion budget, the largest in state history. Politicians patted themselves on the back because this fiscal year's budget is likely to produce another surplus.

Yet what do taxpayers get for all this outpouring of their collective wealth? Rotten planning, poor services and a 'public be damned' attitude in general.

South Shore motorists have been suffering with a glaring example of this general sloppiness in the repaving project on Rte. 3 from Hanover to Weymouth. The project has been a boondoggle from conception to completion.

It is only fair to point out that federal highway officials also have a hand in your discomfiture. Instead of doing the region a favor, such as approving the repaving work in late winter or early spring, those who regulate others but never have to suffer the consequences of their decisions approved the state project in mid-May — just as summer traffic was hitting Rte. 3 for the Cape and other destinations.

But once the feds finally told the state it could begin the project, the state fumbled badly in a rush to get the project done.

I recently spent 90 minutes on the road between two exits — Derby Street (Exit 15) in Hingham and Rte. 53 (Exit 13) in Hanover. At a distance of less than five miles, the average speed that morning works out to three miles per hour. I could have traveled faster on foot.

Why such a severe backup? Why, they're paving the last 400 yards of the project near the Hanover exit. Surely enough, this happened the day after the Patriot Ledger ran an article in which officials assured us the tie-ups would be over in a week.

The project proves that the sensible way is not how we do things in Massachusetts. In New York state, for example, work crews barricade off superhighways a section at a time as they complete the job, leaving two lanes open for traffic. Motorists don't move very fast, but 25 or 30 m.p.h. is better than three.

In New York, they even stripe the work zone on a temporary basis so drivers have an idea of where the road is headed.

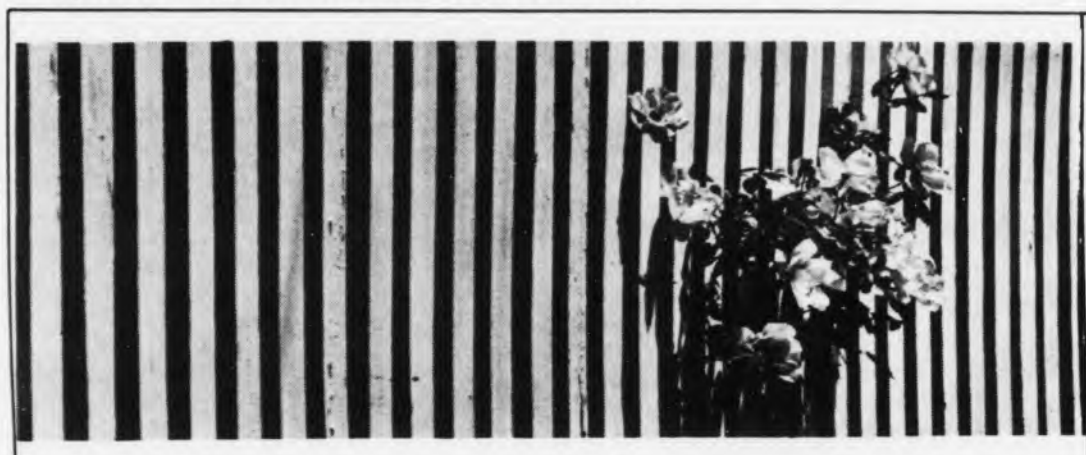
But once behind the wheel in the Bay State, you're expected to engage in clairvoyance. Everybody keeps you guessing as to which way to go: the road crew, the state police, everyone. No stripes have been painted, so cars are everywhere within the 50-foot swath of asphalt.

But they do give you a courteous little orange sign telling you to "expect delays." Thanks for the favor!

After putting up with sometimes two, sometimes four and sometimes three-and-a-half lanes of traffic, the motorist finally sees what has caused the delay — and, by sheer accident, which lane they should head for. The flashing arrow tells everyone, surprise, this is the lane that's closed. Invariably, it's placed over a hill or around the bend so as to keep the confusion level high for the longest time possible.

Is it any wonder why some drivers are so crazy hereabouts? Why bother to be careful and courteous when you can't predict with any reasonable accuracy where the road is headed next?

I wonder how rapidly this situation would change if workers, consultants, salespeople and others who depend on their cars for a living were allowed to deduct time lost in these needless traffic jams from their net state income tax each year. One thing's for sure: the state treasury would shrink to deficit size very quickly.



And what about wear and tear on cars? Such tie-ups are among the fastest ways to make a young car very old.

Then there's the cost that cannot be added up —the cost of frazzled nerves on a hot day. The traffic jam last week was enough to turn even the most placid motorist into a snarling animal. It could be seen on faces, covered with sweat, all around.

It's no wonder the state can't handle a simple reconstruction project. According to a report in this week's Boston Sunday Globe, state officials don't even know how many state workers there are. That's right — the estimates range from 75,000 to 95,000. Not important? Some state accountants say a one-percent difference in estimations of the number of workers means a $50-million difference in the state payroll. One wonders how they arrive at any sort of final budget figure each year!

But voters keep returning incumbents to office time and time again who either turn a blind eye to —or worse, wink at — such incompetence. Voters who return Republican, Democrat or independent alike are expressing their satisfaction with this state of affairs.

I agree with Barbara Anderson, president of Citizens for Limited Taxtion. It's time for Proposition 2 1/2, Part II, in order to force the state to live within a budget, just like the rest of us must do. State officials in Boston don't drive our roads, or ride our Red Line trains, or stand for unreasonable lengths of time in Registry lines. The least they can do is live within our means. That's what the word commonwealth is all about.

If good fences make good neighbors, imagine what roses add to the situation. Here on Howard Gleason Road near the Yacht Club, roses bloom through obstacles. (Rose Cundari photo)

Women's Center helps battered women

By Lois Martin

This is a story about hard times, and people who never get the breaks.

On the other hand it's a story about a guy and a girl who fell in love when they were teenagers. She liked him because she thought he was handsome, worldly, would take care of her. . . . He fell for her because she only saw the positive potential in him.

She got to see a lot more than that over the eight years they spent together. Now, one year after they parted, Cathy is a wiser woman, educated to the ways of battering by a man, her former boy friend, who's now in prison.

It bears mention here, that we could as easily be writing about an important person in town, as well as one who never got a grip on his life. Because the battering of women has not been left to the indigent, the poor, the unfortunate. Abuse of women is done by men from every cultural, racial, educational and economic level.

In fact a profile cannot be done by person so well as it can be done by characteristic: a batterer is a man with a need to control women, by use of verbal and physical abuse. That's the profile.

And in this case the battering was done not by a husband but by a boy friend. We have interviewed Cathy at her generous acquiescence. She contacted us through officials at the South Shore Women's Center.

The center is in Plymouth. It has available a hotline 24 hours a day. And it has not only service and shelter for battered women but a program for battering men. It does in fact, address the whole problem, not just the result of it.

Cathy is 26 years old, unmarried and in fact, never married. She has a son who's 6.

She met her boy friend when she was 14 and he was 16. "It was," she says, "even then, not normal. He was in trouble, headed for an accumulation of charges, mostly connected with violence, guns, weapons, threats."

But then, as we said, she thought he was handsome, worldly, that he knew so much, he would take care of her, show her the world. It was a pretty picture.

One that got smashed in the dangerous partnership of their eight years.

For one year she's been living without him. She says it's like "waking up from a bad dream." She's got a new life going. But hers is still in its delicate phases. She is, in her courageous effort to control her life, fragile. All her adult life, until these months, has been spent under the violent dominance of a man. She is getting the hang of living without that. She reminds one of tender new shoots. There is a need to be careful of those, no matter how perfectly they are formed.

Cathy has dark hair and wonderful large brown eyes, replete with lashes. She's slim. And she's purposeful about speaking out of her experience so others can find a pathway out of the hovel of horror that is the lifestyle of being battered.

She decided she'd talk about it, give a message. "Because I have lived through it," she says, "I can help someone else. I'd like women to know they shouldn't doubt themselves. Trust yourself."

We call the boy friend 'him' or 'he,' the unnamed third person. So little does he rate in Cathy's life, so much he has affected her past, she's unwilling to attribute even a pseudonym for 'him' here. He doesn't rate anymore. She wishes she'd never let him rate at all.

But back then she was only 14, in school, impressionable, in love. Her parents were at a loss to separate the two. He at 16 was already on the run from police. Out of school, he wasn't working and in fact he never held a job, never wanted to, during their eight years together. Everything wrong in his life, she said, was always someone else's fault.

She moved away with him when she was 17. She bought his excuses, his anger. He'd had a rough time, a rotten childhood. She'd seen him punch holes in walls and surrender himself to a rage. But with so much trouble all the time, she turned the blame on herself. "What's wrong with me?" she used to say. "I believed his lies and when we moved out of state again, the abuse started. First there was only the name calling with his temper." That transisted rapidly to the physical stuff. "I felt he didn't know what he was doing. I made excuses. But each person has to be responsible for what he does."

One of the things he did was threaten her family, a lot. In fact that kind of action along with a follow up attack, is what landed him a spot in jail.

One of his hang-ups was weapons. He of course wasn't working but he managed to harass money out of her for what he wanted. That included drugs and alcohol. She was sometimes on welfare, sometimes working, whatever was allowable in their tempestuous relationship. He left her when she was seven months pregnant. Unfortunately, he came back. There's more to his record, being jailed, paroled, and jailed again when the parole was violated.

Meanwhile, Cathy went first to DOVE in Quincy. That is a viable service for battered women. Then she went to family services and she had benefit of one-on-one counselling and a support group. Her child had been born and "had seen a lot he shouldn't have seen when he was three years old."

Cathy also learned 'he' had an older woman in his life who met his needs. She started fighting back when she got hurt. She'd learned it didn't make any difference what she did, he'd still get violent and furious.

"Funny," she says, "women can take a lot but when they see their children get hurt, something just snaps inside."

That's what happened in Cathy's life. The boy friend, 'he,' started abusing their son. That's when she decided she couldn't live with him, now and then, here or there, anywhere.

"The long bad dream finally ended."

Cathy has used the services at South Shore Women's Center and she offers her experience to others who feel they are alone, abandoned and isolated in abuse. There is a way out. Places like DOVE and South Shore Women's Center are ways. The services include legal direction, emotional help, confidence building and new beginnings.

"Look in the mirror," she says to women who are abused. "Ask yourself if this is how you really want to live. You don't have to stay in that.

"He's not beating you because he had a bad day at work. It's not that he just got home in bad traffic. He chooses to act that way. He has to be responsible. We have to be responsible and take care of us."

If you ask about Cathy today, know this from her new perspective. "I have a new relationship, peace and control. I laugh every day. For years, I didn't laugh." 746-2664 is the number for the Women's Center, should you need it.

It is a bold move to take one's life in hand. It is daring and it is beautiful, so much lovelier than giving in to being battered. Each person, man and woman, deserves better than a life filled with violence and fear.

It's happening . . .

Winning bids go to Big Sister Association

Over $11,000 was raised at the first annual Big Sister Association auction on May 19th at the Oaks Estate in Cohasset. Formerly the Jessie B. Cox Estate the Oaks is now the corporate headquarters for the Yankee companies.

The Big Sister Association matches girls aged 7-15 with selected women volunteers who serve as positive role models. The Big Sister agency of Greater Boston is the oldest and largest Big Sister agency in the country.

The highest bid for the day went for a cocktail cruise for 10 couples aboard a 66-foot motor yacht. Valued at $1300 the cruise sold for $2100! Other items which caused vigorous bidding included a run with Joan Benoit, a flight with Channel 5's Chet Curtis in his private plane, an NBA basketball autographed by the Celtics, and 10 pounds of Godiva chocolates (valued at $200).

A few Big and Little Sisters were on hand to carry the goods through the crowd of potential buyers. Auction etiquette did not come easily to 8-year old Little Sister Mercy Watson who cried when her $2.00 bid to see the Red Sox was outbidded 10 times over. In the end she was all smiles when Big Sister Board Director Bill Markey gave Mercy tickets to watch the Sox play.

The function was co-chaired by Big Sister Board members Betsey Montle, Priscilla Swift and Jack Agnew, who served as auctioneer. Paul Montle is president of the Yankee Companies and provided the Oaks Estate to house the fundraising event.

Christmas in July?

You might have thought Christmas was arriving in July as the Cohasset Chamber of Commerce met last Wednesday to lay the groundwork for a repeat of "White Christmas in Cohasset."

An encore presentation of last year's event will be held again this year in December. The Chamber will sponsor the community-wide event .

The Chamber is also planning a clambake to be held in September for all members.

Family story hour

The Paul Pratt Memorial Library invites school-age children and their parents to a Family Story Hour Monday, July 22 at 7:30 p.m.

This is the third in a series of five evening programs.

David Wadsworth, curator of the Cohasset Historical Society and town archivist, will tell of shipwrecks which have occurred on Cohasset rocks, Minot, and the area.

Particular vessels which Mr. Wadsworth will talk about will include, the "St. John," the "New Empire", the "Portland," the "Juniata", and the "Seramapore".

Wadsworth is a member of the town's historical commission and has written numerous articles about Cohasset's past for local newspapers. This will be his third appearance to speak to "Family Story Hour." His program will last about an hour.

S.S. Art Center offers workshop

The South Shore Art Center is offering a self-expressive workshop zeroing in on working with color for intermediate and advanced artists.

Taught by artist-instructor Betty Kohlberg, the workshop is scheduled for July 29 and 30, and August 1 and 2, from 9:30 a.m. to 2:30 p.m. Registrations may be made through the South Shore Art Center, 103 Ripley Road in Cohasset.

Kohlberg will have students approach drawing from an emotional point of view rather than explicit rendering of form. Exercises will concentrate on line, shape, negative space and use of flat planes.

Kohlberg, a visiting professor of art at Massachusetts College of Art, exhibits extensively in Boston and New York galleries and is represented in major corporate collections. She received her masters of fine arts from Tufts University.

If an intensive workshop is too much, the Art Center currently has summer classes in drawing, painting, photography, design and children's art with a second session of courses beginning August 5. For complete information on all workshops and courses, call the Center, 383-9548.

Learn to see through the South Shore Art Center's one week intensive landscape photography workshop.

The workshop, taught by photographer John Droege, runs July 22 through July 26 for six hours daily. Registration may be made through the Center at 103 Ripley Road in Cohasset.

The course is designed for the photographer who has a working knowledge of photography and some awareness of imagery, but desires a more thorough understanding of the controls available to him. The course objective is to raise the student's visual appreciation through daily shooting assignments and critiques, and to increase the technical understanding and skills with the equipment, processes and materials of photography. Students will use 35 mm cameras and color slides.

Droege, a professor of art at Bridgewater State College, has had many national shows. He has an MA and MFA from Notre Dame and has studied photography with color landscape photographer Elliot Porter.

For further information on this workshop or other Center courses, call 383-9548.

Cohasset youth excel in Bay State Games

by Marc Sperber

A thirteen-year-old Cohasset girl took the gold medal in the solo synchronized swimming event at the Bay State Games this past weekend, and received a first-place blue ribbon in the figure event.

Ann Henry, of 94 North Main St., received a national rank score of 57.5, two points above the minimum score necessary for national rank recognition. She competed in the open category for those twelve and under. Henry celebrated her 13th birthday last Friday, the first day of the games.

She has been competing for three years, and will be moving to Arizona later this month to train for a year with Linda Lichter, a top-seeded synchronizer swimmer and national coach.

Henry is coached by her mother, Carol Henry, who has been involved with synchronized swimming and coaching at the South Shore YMCA for 15 years.

Mrs. Henry noted the Olympic contestants in synchronized swimming generally compete between the ages of 20 and 24. Thus the 1988 Olympics, to be held in Seoul, South Korea, would be "much too early" for her daughter. "Ann will only be 20 in 1992." she added.

In addition, the South Shore YMCA synchronized swimming team won fourth place in the team event.

All synchronized swimming events were held last Saturday at Boston University. Carol Henry served as one of the five accredited coaches.

In addition to Henry, five other Cohasset residents participated in the games, helping to give the southeast region teams in which they competed all-around solid showings.

The Bay State Games is an amateur sports festival, comprising competitions in twenty three sports. High school students may compete in the scholastic divisions, while collegiates and older athletes compete in men's and women's open contests. The southeast region encompasses the South Shore and coastal communities.

Jennifer Martin, of 45 North Main St., was a member of the synchronized swimming team of the Quincy YMCA. The team placed second in the beginner's category. Martin is a member of the class of 1989 at Cohasset High School.

BAY STATE GAMES

Tracy Fitzpatrick, 18, competed in the women's open category of basketball, playing for the southeast division team. The team won its first match on Friday against the opposing team from the western region by a score of 80-68. It lost, however, the following day to the team from the metropolitan region 104-81. Fitzpatrick's record in this game was 1-2-4. The team lost the match for the bronze medal to the central division team on Sunday, 77-64.

The boy's scholastic soccer team had three Cohasset boys on the squad.

The team lost its first match to the boy's scholastic team of the northeast division on Friday, 5-0. It lost again the following day to the team from the metropolitan division, 3-1, thereby forfeiting a chance to play for a medal.

John Reidy, of 170 Fair Oaks Lane, a member of Cohasset High's class of 1987, was a defense player. "I tried out for the Bay State Games to play with better coaching and competition," he said. This was his third year in the games, and is also a member of the Coastal League's All-Star team. He said that he is interested in attending Boston College, Holy Cross or UMAss to study business.

Kevin Leary, 6 Holly Lane, said that the unfamiliar playing field surface of Northeastern's Parsons Field contributed to the team's Friday loss. "It's a totally different game on Astroturf," he noted, and added that the tight defense of the opposing team caused a "congested" game. He called the southeastern division boy's team "well-disciplined," but said that it was "missing the winning punch."

Robert Schultz, of 38 Linden Drive, said that he was "hoping to participate with and against many of the best soccer players in the state," and said that this experience would help him "prepare for college."

A right-wing player, Schultz plays varsity soccer at Cohasset High School, where he will be a senior in the fall. He was named the Best Offensive Player for 1984, and was captain of the team this past year. He has also been a member of the Coastal League All-Stars for the past three years.

Schultz said that he was hoping to attend Colby, Harvard or Babson to study business administration.

The Bay State Games made their debut in 1983. A small pilot program, known as Sportfest '82 had been staged the previous year.

The idea for a state-wide amateur sports competition had its birth in New York, which introduced the Empire State Games in 1978, the same year as the National Sports Festival. Florida began its games in 1980, and Pennsylvania followed in 1982.

Doug Arnot, director of the Bay State Games since its inception, admitted that the games "certainly are increasing the possibility that more Massachusetts people will make it to the Olympics."

But he stressed that the real purpose is to give those athletes with neither the talent nor the drive for the highest echelons of competition greater opportunities.

"There need to be some steps in between the broad base of amateur-level competition and the rigorous competition that constitutes training for the Olympics, he said.

As a collegiate coach, Arnot said he was tired of seeing "sprinkling more sugar" on top athletes, and thus accepted the directorship of the games in mid-1982. A former attorney, Arnot now works "full-time and more" for the Games.

"Awareness of the games is growing," he said. Twenty three sports are now included, taking place at five area colleges. Over 100 trainers worked with this year's 4,000 athletes Winter games were held for the first time February in the Berkshires.

The explosion in popularity has been beneficial, noted Arnot. "The calibre of the competition and of the Organization itself has grown tremendously."

Tim Daggett, a member of the 1984 Olympic Gymnastics team said, "a lot of kids are doing it (participating in the Games) for recreation, but it gives you another chance to go a little beyond."

The opening ceremony, held at Boston College's Alumni Stadium on Friday night, was punctuated by heavy rains. Nonetheless, the athletes marched into the stadium accompanied by the Concord Minutemen, the Medford Grenadiers and the Color Guard of the U.S.S. Constitution.

Two torches, originating in Pittsfield and Chatham on Cape Cod, were lit by the respective town mayors and relayed through the state en route to the Newton campus.

Strawberry Parfait draws a split

By Melissa Barcomb

"You win one and you lose one," so went the Strawberry Parfait softball team Sunday, as they split a doubleheader with Marshfield Sunoco.

With a little luck the Parfait might have wound up with both games tucked away on the win column, as they were tied 3-3 after seven innings.

However, in the eighth inning, Marshfield ended it with two runs, for a 5-3 win.

In the second game, the Parfait quickly made it clear that they were in no mood to drop a doubleheader, as they jumped on Marshfield for four runs in the first inning.

After back to back hits by the Dooley brothers — Kevin and Joe — Donny Cahil smacked a long homerun to left, giving the Parfait a quick 3-0 lead.

Joe Pomerico brought the score to 4-0 after hitting a double and then coming home.

The Parfait scored three more runs in the second inning with Joe Pomerico, Kevin Dooley, Donny Cahil and John Usher all hitting strongly.

New pitcher, Marty McGinn, allowed no runs and few hits in the third inning.

In the top of the fourth inning the Parfait's batting was definitely up to par as they scored three runs.

After two successful singles by David Rourke and Torin Sweeney, Joe Dooley's single brought David Rourke home.

Joe Dooley came home following hits from Kevin Dooley and Donny Cahil.

Danny Cahil slid in for the third run of the inning off Joe Pomerico's hit.

Marshfield managed to squeeze in three runs in the bottom of the fourth to allow Parfait to lead, 10-3.

Parfait had one hit right after another in the sixth inning.

Torin Sweeney connected with a double and then scored off of Joe Dooley's double. Kevin Dooley's double brought Joe home.

With Kevin on third base, John Usher got up to bat and smacked a single, bringing Kevin home.

The final score of game two was 14-4, a Parfait win.

. . . Cohasset summer sports

By Lisa Shumaker

FLYING SCOT RACE SERIES

The Flying Scots were unable to race this week due to excessive winds. Look for upcoming results in next week's paper.

COHASSET SWIM TEAM

The Swim Team opened its season with an impressive victory over the Duxbury Aquadux, 407 to 157.

Coaches Maureen Buckley and John Santini were both very proud of the win, especially since the meet was won in foreign waters. Both coaches felt this meet was very challenging to all their swimmers and the victory will set Cohasset up for a great season.

According to Buckley, "Hopefully this win will inspire the swimmers to repeat or even better their performances." Overall, the coaches felt everyone swam "exceptionally."

Trevor Cook, Ben Redfield, Becky Golden and Lauren Devito all had stand-out performances for the eight-and-under group. These swimmers combined for both firsts and seconds in the freestyle events.

Led by the hard work of Danny Baird, the 10-and-under group racked up 63 points for the team. Other 10-and-unders — David Leahy, Chip Anderson, Alix Knox and Robin Devito — backed up Baird in sweeping their division.

One of Cohasset's strongest groups, the 12-and-unders, placed both first and second in nearly every event. Jonathan Delima and Jennifer Jackson each took first in the I.M., freestyle and butterfly events. Other impressive 12-and-under times were turned in by Brooke Anderson, Colin Knox, Kelley Chase, Billy Baird, Christopher Henderson and Madeline McDonald.

Swimming four events apiece, Joel Whitman, Craig Carter and Chris McLaughlin were the backbone of the boys' 14-and-under crew. Nancy Riley, Amy Hobbs, Sara Bishop, Liz Buckley and Heather Doherty were the thrust of the girls' 14-and-under squad.

Unfortunately, Duxbury's 16-and-under swimmers were non-existent. However, John Jackson, Greg Julian, Caitlin Staunton, Katie Anderson, Christina Buckley and Mark Delaney still turned in great performances while competing against each other.

Each week several swimmers are recognized for their dedication, attendance, hard work, and enthusiasm. This week the title of "Star of the Week" was given to Katie Carroll, Marisol Perry, Danny Baird, Amie Theriault and Rebecca Kirk.

The next meet will be held in Cohasset on July 17 when the team will be hosting the Bel River Swim Club. Cohasset will then travel to Scituate on July 19 and take on the Scituate Yacht Club Swim Team. Good luck to all swimmers.

GIRLS' BASKETBALL

The girls are not satisfied with just making it to the state championships this year. Next year they want to go one step further and win the whole thing.

In preparing to fulfill this goal, the girls have been involved in a summer basketball league held at the Hingham Sports Center. Hopefully, by practicing together this summer the girls will be able to get onto a championship team.

Playing on a tennis court that has been converted into a basketball court, the girls try to make the best out of sweltering temperatures and collapsible rims. The girls must also learn to handle the new regulation basketball that is to be used from now on in girls' basketball games. This new ball is much smaller and lighter than the old ball which means the girls have to adjust both their passes and shots accordingly.

The girls have been coaching themselves this summer. Led by captain Anne O'Leary the team's overall record at this point is two and two. Last Tuesday the girls pulverized Duxbury by 20 points. Friday Cohasset lost a heartbreaker to Rockland. This game was decided in overtime and the girls lost by a mere basket.

This week the girls take on Norwell Tuesday, and Whitman-Hanson Friday. Both games begin at 5:30.

To insure many great teams in future years, Cohasset has also put together a JV girls team that plays week nights in Marshfield. The Skippers have been successful in this summer league in the past, and hopefully this year will be no exception.

BOYS' BASKETBALL

Hoping to repeat last year's tremendous season, the varsity boys' basketball team has been hard at work this summer. Consisting mainly of younger varsity hopefuls, this team plays at the South Shore Voc. Tech. Many of its players also play in Marshfield.

The boys have been led by seasoned veterans Bobby Shultz and Todd Trautwein. With the experience of these boys and the raw talent of the younger members of the team, hopefully Cohasset will have a successful summer season and come back even stronger next winter — if that is possible.

Historical Society Volunteers

The Cohasset Historical Society is looking for volunteer museum guides to assist its curator at the Society's two unique museums at Cohasset Center or to serve at the Caleb Lothrop House, Summer Street.

The two museums located at the center are the Capt. John Wilson House, and 1810 Sea Captain's home now furnished as an historical house, and the Maritime Museum.

Regular open times at the museums during July, August and September are 1:30 to 4:30 each afternoon except Mondays.

The Society is looking for people to staff the Capt. Wilson House on a regular basis. Mature persons with an interest in Cohasset's history and old houses are invited to consider the opportunity to assist in the Society's summer museum program.

The Society's Caleb Lothrop House is planning to schedule regular open hours in the near future. This is an 1823 brick-ended Georgian home now furnished as an historical house, and serves as the Society's headquarters.

Those people who have an interest in history, antiques, and enjoy meeting and talking with people should consider the position for one afternoon a week or several days.

Those people who are interested in volunteering or would like additional information please call the Historical Society at 383-0773 or 383-6930, or drop by the Capt. Wilson House and Maritime Museum during afternoon open hours. The Lothrop House may be visited by appointment by calling the Society.

Basketball Camp stresses fundamentals

By Mike Berger

Chances are if your child loves basketball, is enrolled in either Grades 4-9, cried when the Boston Celtics lost to the Lakers in the championships and is tired of the up and down Red Sox, he probably asked his parents if he could enroll in the South Shore Basketball Camp held at Scituate High-School last week.

All the area hoop gurus were there such as Scituate High School Basketball Coach Paul Svensen, the founder of Eddie and the Cruisers and Division III Championship Coach Eddie Minelli and John Levangie who finished the camp and then coached a basketball team in the Bay State Games. Levangie, a Scituate resident, is the coach of the Boston College High School team.

In addition, the staff included ex-Hingham High School hoop coach and now Principal Mike Donnell, Dick Infacelli of South Shore Vocational Technical School, Dan Whittim of Walpole High, Wayne Hamilton of Holbrook, Bill Topham of Lebanon, Vermont, Steve Fernandes of Silver Lake and and assistant football coach of Norwell, Tom Higgins, an ex-Cohasset basketball player and Jim Sullivan of Quincy.

The camp was also highlighted by talks by Harvard Basketball Coach Frank McLaughlin and ex-Celtic Togo Polazzi.

The key word at the camp was fundamentals, both offensively and defensively. Each player received individual instruction in every facet of the game. The 80 students who enrolled in the camp and paid $100 for the five day, seven hour per day instruction were broken down into nine teams with an individual coach.

The students' day included lectures and games, drill stations, individual evaluations and a drill book.

The philosophy of the camp, said Svensen, is to teach and improve fundamental skills of basketball at an early age.

"There is a definite place for all boys interested in learning or improving their skills regardless of their size or ability. The three things which make his camp different from others are fundamentals, the concentration on the defensive aspect of the game and the quality and expertise of the staff," said Svensen.

"Our philosophy is if the player is sound fundamentally and knows the game he will improve."

The players came from Hingham, Hull, Cohasset, Scituate, Hanover, Marshfield, Norwell, Quincy, Milton and Weymouth. Some players were tall, others short, some lean and others portly. But they all played and drilled and everyone played a half a game in competition.

Patrick Murray, 13, of Hingham came to the camp to get more help on defense. His best moment of the week came when his team won the championship game.

Derick Haire, 11, of Scituate wanted to learn more about basketball, to get a better feel for the game and to learn about defense.

Tim Strazdes, 14, enjoyed the lectures by Polazzi and McLaughlin and felt he improved his defense and rebounding. "We learned a lot about basketball that we wouldn't be hearing on the street."

This is the third year Svensen has organized the camp. In previous years the highest number of players enrolled reached 100 but Svensen said he would never sacrifice the quality of the camp and the individual instruction to satisfy the numbers.

Svensen said he formed the camp because he felt not enought was being done in the communities, particulary in the summer to develop a young player's interest and skill in the sport.

There are many high school camps, he said, but not enough camps who take the time to teach the sport thoroughly to a fourth and fifth grader.

Your friend for life

By the Scituate Coast Guard

Statistics show that 75 percent of those who lost their lives in boating accidents did not use their personal flotation devices.

Although some were good swimmers cold shock and hypothermia overtook them in their attempt to swim to safety.

In these cases a personal flotation device (PFD) could have delayed the onset of hypothermia.

The law says that besides other safety devices a PFD must be available for each person on board.

There are several types of PFDs available for oceans, lakes, rivers and protected waters. Since our intent is to reach the inland boater (rivers and lakes) we suggest that they recognize and learn about type II (buoyant vest), type III (marine buoyant device), and type IV (throwable device).

TYPE II (BUOYANT VEST)

This device is the familiar "horse collar" and is available in four sizes: adult, child (med.), child (small), and infant.

It must be of the proper size for the person who is to wear it. The device is designed to turn an unconscious person face up or slightly backward in the water. Properly worn, it will keep a person's head and shoulders above water. It is also comfortable to wear and will not affect a person's boating pleasure.

TYPE III (MARINE BUOYANT DEVICE)

This device comes in a variety of styles, colors and sizes, and is more comfortable to wear than other types.

This group includes the ski vests, hunting and fishing vests, float coats and other devices made especially for different types of water sports.

The type III is designed to float a conscious person in a vertical position but not to turn an unconscious person face up in the water.

It is particularly useful when hunting or fishing from a boat, for it is designed for comfort and not to impair the movement of fishermen or reduce the boating pleasure of the wearer. It also delays the onset of hypothermia while in the water.

'Death of a Salesman', 'The Hollow' for next year

At the Cohasset Dramatic Club's recent annual meeting, two of the club's three productions for its 1985-86 season were announced.

Scheduled for performance on the town hall stage next fall is playwright Arthur Miller's American Classic, "Death of A Salesman" to be directed by Cohasset's Helen Ketcham.

Flo Kelly will serve as production manager for this modern drama.

The dramatic club's winter production will be Agatha Christie's mystery, "The Hollow", directed by Julia W. Jordan. Betty Miessner will be the producer of the Christie play. The club's spring production will be announced soon.

Newly elected to the board of directors of the Cohasset Dramatic Club at its recent annual meeting were John Kuhn, Don Massa, Joan Jensen and Tamsyn Elliot.

Officers for the forthcoming year are Wayne Miessner, president; Yvonne Julian, vice president; Jan Higbee, recording secretary; Tamsyn Elliot, corresponding secretary and Richard Donovan, treasurer.

Next year's town hall shows will see the introduction of a newly purchased state-of-the-art miniaturized modular stage lighting system, owned by the dramatic club.

The full stage lighting capabilities of the town hall auditorium can be utilized for the first time with this recent acquisition generously funded in major part by the South Shore Playhouse Associates.

With the new lighting system the dramatic club will unveil another recent acquisition, a new audio system for stage sound effects. Together, these new additions to the club's production capabilities should assist the dramatic club in maintaining its stated goals of performing "worthwhile shows for dramatic, charitable and social benefit" during its forthcoming 65th season.

State Sec. Evelyn Murphy visits the So. Shore

State Sen. William Golden escorted Evelyn Murphy around his territory this week encouraging the cabinet member to invest in economic growth on the South Shore.

Murphy is Secretary of Economic Affairs and agrees, she said Monday, with Golden's thesis of providing economic development with environmental balance to protect the quality of life.

Particularly, Secretary Murphy has given attention to the people who were laid off work at General Dynamics. Her department provides training and relocating programs.

That extends to the Displaced Homemaker Programs. There are, she says, about 150,000 women who have lost support and a way of life through, often, a loss of mate. Last week Murphy's office announced $908,000 in grant money that will be used throughout the state to retrain and direct women to productive work. A satellite center of the Displaced Homemaker program will be in Marshfield, though no specific location has yet been announced.

Also coordinated and encouraged through her department is sponsorship of day-care centers through corporations. This program, said Golden and Murphy, enables a powerful work force of able and qualified women to work with their small children and be cared for through the employer.

Of the continuing transportation debate, one of the South Shore's more obvious needs for improvement, Golden said he supported another ramp entrance/exit for Rte. 3, to be located within or near the Marshfield Industrial Park.

The state official was on her third swing through this area in 12 months. Infusing balanced growth with the required planning is more challenging at this time, she said, because within the last year there were 160,000 new jobs, "an explosion that the state hasn't seen in employment since 1942."

Young People's Summer Theater prepares for 'Barnum'

The Young People's Summer Theatre's rehearsals for the musical "Barnum," are well under way and performances are scheduled for Aug. 1, 2, and 3 at 8 p.m. in Scituate High School.

The musical has a cast of over 70 people between the ages of 12 and 22 years-old who rehearse five evenings a week at the First Trinitarian Congregational Church in Scituate under the direction of Don Capen.

"Barnum" is a musical which is based on the life of P.T. Barnum, best known for the Barnum and Bailey Circus. "What people don't know," he adds, "is that Barnum led an incredible life of ups and downs before he joined with James Bailey to form what has always been known as The Greatest Show On Earth." Capen added that P.T. Barnum opened the American Museum in Connecticut until it burned down, destroying over 600,000 attractions and caused him to go broke. He also went into politics which became a fiasco, and finally formed the circus at 70 years-old. The musical tells of his life from 1835 to 1880.

Assisting Capen is Music Director Karol Spinola and assistants Kim Karlberg and Peter Law.

Taking on the role of Barnum only three weeks before opening night is Scituate resident Doug Mathews, who has been a YPST member for five years and had his first "meaty" role last summer as Bruce in "On the 20th Century."

The cast will be publicizing the show by holding a Balloon Day in Scituate Harbor Saturday, July 27, during the day.

Tickets for the show will be available then, at the door the performance nights, or by calling 871-5831.

New buses leased to P & B

State Transportation Secretary Frederick P. Salvucci announced today that Plymouth & Brockton bus company customers will soon be riding in seven brand new buses, thanks to a state program which will allow the company to lease the vehicles from the state at low rates. The vehicles, valued at $1.2 million, will be delivered in September.

The award was made under the state Intercity Bus Capital Assistance Program (IBCAP), through which the state purchases new coach buses and then leases them to private carriers at savings up to $1000 a month for each vehicle.

"Sen. William Golden and Rep. Frank Hynes deserve credit for their support of the IBCAP program and the benefits that will be provided through P & B for commuters," Salvucci said. "The Plymouth and Brockton bus company provides an important service to commuters throughout the South Shore and Cape Cod. This award will allow them to upgrade service in a relatively low-cost way."

"The IBCAP program is part of Governor Dukakis' overall plan to improve mass transportation options and reduce highway congestion all over the state," he added.

This year, 28 vehicles valued at $5 million are being awarded under the program to companies throughout Massachusetts. Awards are based on fleet age, ridership, and other service characteristics. Local highway congestion and the availability of other transit services in the area are also taken into account.

Salvucci said that six of the 28 vehicles being awarded are equipped with wheelchair lifts. The P & B award includes one of the lift-equipped buses.

"This is the first time anywhere in the nation that this type of bus will be accessible to special needs riders," he said. "If the lifts prove successful, we will install them in the remaining 22 buses."

Salvucci added that the state would end up fully repaid for the $5 million in program funding.

"After a lease period of seven years, the buses will be sold at auction," he explained. "The lease payments on the vehicles plus the money received from their sale will completely cover program costs."

Funding for this round of IBCAP awards was made available by the 1983 Transportation Bond Issue, and no additional vehicles can be provided until further funding is authorized. There is $5 million for the program in the bond issue currently pending before the legislature.

P & B provides transportation from the South Shore, Plymouth & Cape Cod to Boston.

A Letter to All of Us: The following letter comes from the U.C.C. National Committee on Persons with Disabilities.

Dear Pastor Benbow and Members of the Second Congregational U.C.C.:

We rejoice with you in your accomplishment, namely that of achieving total accessibility and functionality for persons with disabilities in the life, work, worship and witness of your congregation in your community.

We are particularly glad for the installation of an elevator, the ramping of your front entrance, and the inclusion of accessible and functional restroom facilities. We know that now no barrier exists for such persons (as well as to anyone else) to worship and fellowship in your building.

Fish, Assistant Director of the Massachusetts Poison Control System told a meeting of our office managers that the Center received over 100,000 calls last year requesting help and information for poison victims. This chart can be taped to the inside of a medicine cabinet or some other convenient location for easy reference if ever needed. Osgood Fun Day!

Above: There was one requirement of the day last week — have fun. Sarena Quemere (l) and Martina Snyder ungrudgingly comply.

Upper right: A fun day to some, is just plain yucky to others. Here we find Maggie O'Connor in a bit of a dilemma as she puts in a call to dad for the rescue.

It's a tough job preparing for any athletic competition. Just ask Kierston Strouse, who had to struggle with her shoes after some fierce Jupiter jumping.

There's a knack to 'cool pool' and Wes DeSantis is getting some useful hints from pro Nancy Kuntz.

Complete and unshakeable concentration is necessary for dart-throwing, and Sean Morris (center) has a perfect attitude. Partners Michael Lennon (left) and Tucker Gledhill lend some extra concentration to the effort.

Politicus — by David A. Mittell, Jr.

Evil omens in the Boston bailout

Well, the "Boston bailout" is history until the next time, and Mayor Ray Flynn, that charming little devil with seven relatives on the municipal payroll, has convinced the Democratic majority in the Massachusetts legislature (the vote falling largely along party lines) to enact the taxes to toss another $20 million Boston's way. The Globe is telling us, as it has been telling us at least since Curley's day, that Boston's financial house is at last in order. We will believe it until the next time, which will be in 1988, the year after Flynn has buried Mike McCormack, Joe Tierney, or some other featherweight in the 1987 municipal election.

All of the above including the predictions are, of course, true since you read them here. But the situation is not as bleak as it appears. Flynn's relatives mostly occupy "yes-you-have-to-show-up-fella," low-paying jobs, not the high-paying, "go-live-on-the-South-Shore" no-show jobs which characterized the late unlamented White administration. Secondly, $20 million is not a very large sum in a state that will spend $8.8 billion in 1986. It will take a lot more than that to produce our next "scheduled" state tax increase (in 1987, the year after Mike Dukakis has destroyed Ed King, Lyndon LaRouche, or whoever else has delusions of defeating him in 1986.)

However, there are several things that bother me about the passage of the Boston bailout bill, things that while perhaps only symbolic, nevertheless portend ill for the direction of state politics as the nineties approach.

The first is the quaint, outrageous habit of our legislature of voting on important, tax raising questions during holiday festivals when normal people are celebrating, for instance, the birth of Christ or the birth of the United States. It is precisely at these times that quaint, outrageous politicians seem always to vote to raise normal people's taxes, and they did it over the Fourth when they voted for the bailout bill. They got away with it again; therefore they will do it again. Thus, evil omen #1.

The second evil omen is the attitude that Ray Flynn expresses with such sincerity and shy charm the several times a day that televison crews chance upon him, the attitude that "what's yours is mine." Say the hotel industry is doing well in Boston? Good, let's stick up our visitors by raising the hotel-motel tax. Say Logan Airport, the most convenient major airport in the world, is one of the four or five chief ingredients in the state's amazing prosperity? Good, let's skim five percent off the top of jet fuel sales.

In such a "what's yours is mine" way, Flynn and Kirk Scharfenberg, his mouthpiece at the Globe, went after the jet fuel and hotel taxes simply because they were there. They saw successful operations, and through their power (Flynn) and influence (Sharfenberg) they simply appropriated moneys for an unsuccessful operation, the government of Boston.

Were this 1975, not 1985, such gratuitous tax grabbing would be devastating to Massachusetts. As it is there will probably be no immediate economic impact other than the dismissal of a few chambermaids and jet fuel jockeys. But "Taxachusetts" is never far from business people's consciousness, and the attitude of Flynn, the Globe, and the majority of the legislature would probably remind them of the following delightful Churchill anecdote.

Seems Churchill and Clement Atlee, the Socialist leader, found themselves in a men's room together. As soon as Churchill recognized Atlee, he removed himself to the most distant urinal available, at which point Atlee remarked, "Bashful today, aren't we Winston!"

"No, Clement," rejoined Churchill, "it's only that whenever you see something big and productive you want to tax it or nationalize it!"

In England's case it was thirty years before the attitude Churchill was speaking of in that possibly Apocryphal anecdote virtually eliminated Britain from the world economic stage. In Massachusett's case we should not get too cocky about our present prosperity. We should remember that taxing success (as the jet fuel and hotel taxes do) need not be crippling in dollar amounts to send a very wrong message to business in Massachusetts.

As to Boston, whose prosperity is no where nearly as deep as that of the rest of the state, the peril is more imminent. When a "what's yours is mine" attitude is combined with Boston's long-standing reasons for being unattractive to business, the peril is high. This time Ray Flynn held his hand out and the state obligingly touched it with coin belonging to the hotel and airline industries. It is now quite time for Flynn to stop crying poor mouth and lead Boston into taking responsibility for itself. That —and not the perpetual municipal hand out — is the only hope for a prosperity deep enough to reach Boston's poor.

The third evil omen I see in the Boston bailout is the attitude of the Dukakis coalition. That crowd has supported the bailout almost monolithically, and that scares me. The Dukakis Democrats in the legislature either voted for it or took a walk, if you know what I mean. That scares me because I wonder if their first loyalty is to the Dukakis coalition, of which Ray Flynn's Boston is a prime working part, or if it is to the districts that elected them.

The very same can be said of Massport Director David Davis, a longtime Dukakis associate who twice owes his job to the Duke. As Director of Massport he ought to have been leading the charge against any tax on jet fuel, but he, too, apparently "took a walk" on the issue.

As I see it, any governing coalition that has no effective opposition is a standing danger to good government. To some extent it matters that the head of the coalition — Gov. Dukakis — is honest and able. It also matters that most of those attracted to him are honest and able as well.

Yet this crowd can, has, and will make serious blunders, and the public interest requires effective opposition to them as much as if they were a bunch of thugs, though for a different reason. The very ability and high mindedness of this crowd disposes them to a particular kind of monolithic and snobbish thinking that tends not to be self-correcting.

That is why I groan when from David Davis to the lowliest freshman in the House the entire Dukakis coalition jumps as one over an issue like the Boston bailout. Suppose this crowd bats .406 in good government, as Ted Williams did in baseball in 1941. What then happens to the public interest the 59.4 percent of the time they "strike out" if there is no effective opposition?

The fourth and final evil omen I see in the Boston bailout is the performance of Sen. President William Bulger and his temporary dancing partners, the liberals, the reformers, and the Boston Globe.

Here is a Senate President who does not deign to talk to the press, the public, or most of his colleagues except in one-liners on St. Patrick's Day and other times it pleases him. The Senate he runs is a cross between a secret Irish society and an English men's social club. In the case of the Boston bailout, Bulger long allowed it to be known that he opposed the substance of Ray Flynn's palms-up proposal. then at the last minute, having either changed his mind or not having changed it, he put the measure before the Senate without notice, taking his colleagues totally by surprise, and rammed the bailout home without serious debate.

The regular ineffectual Republican opposition howled, but the Globe, Common Cause, and others who normally make it their business to defend proper process, remained improperly silent. In short, they "whored" themselves, there is no other way to put it, and they did so because in this instance they decided that "the end justified the means."

When the great (though some would say not good) newspaper of the megalopolis takes unto itself to decide that the "end justifies the means," it is time to be concerned abut our political future. That is why, although the Boston bailout may only propose to raise the equivalent of 1/440th of the 1986 state budget, I call it ominous.

PATCHES by Lois Martin

Corporate language barriers

There are sound reasons that I am not listed among corporate giants. It's mostly because of the in-house language. I'm an outsider to it.

Too literal. That's part of the problem. I tend to take people at their word, to look beyond it, even, for understanding. That's a mistake.

Like when I make a routine call to someone at his or her office.

I say my name and ask to speak with the person. But now and then, the answerer says in response, "He is not at his desk," or worse, "he doesn't seem to be at his desk."

Seems to me it's a callous person would do or say nothing about that.

PATCHES

I mean, there's a man missing! His fellow workers, failing to see him at this desk, have given up on him. For them his absence is as good as his death. The man's gone. He doesn't exist anymore. Forget it and him. Not only can he not come to the phone, he can't come to supper, to bed, to arms, to anything. And they don't do anything about it. They accept it, you see, choosing and measuring his entire being by whether or not he's at his desk.

I want to know where he is, if it's all right, he's not at his desk. Did anyone tell his next of kin. It's got to be serious because everyone's so accepting of the finality of his being gone. If, they seem to say, he's not at his desk, he's not. There's no hope of reaching him.

That's it. Give up. There's no mention of giving him a message or calling him back. Too late, the man's not at his desk.

Same thing with, "She had to step out a minute."

In my mind, there's this woman, her foot poised for a moment before she puts it over the threshold into who knows where. Then she steps out and disappears forever.

My Lord, do something. The woman had to step out for a minute and you're all just sitting there. She may have fallen to harm or more aptly, it may have met her as she . . . stepped out for a minute.

Does she do that a lot, or is it like a bumble bee's mating, once? Is she someone who, just as you think you've got a good day's work going, steps out? Ordinarily it'd be none of my business. But with the two-sided possibilities of 'stepping out,' I'd wonder if we should applaud her if and when she stepped in again.

Probably what annoys me most is that when people say these things to strangers on the phone, they expect you to swallow them without comment. It's as if they've told you a fact, when, in fact, they've told you nothing. They've inflamed your curiosity, denied you access to the person whom you needed to speak, and flagrantly made no effort to suggest anything other than the possible demise of that person. Without apology, they do this, as if while speaking nonsense, they made sense.

That's true, as well as phrases like "all things be equal," "getting on board," "working within the parameters."

A long time ago I read this quip that said we were to speak to express not to impress. To that we should add, "nor to confuse or mislead."

There are times when the most basic of talk is the most profound, the most articulate.

I love the salient story told on Harry Truman, the man whose mother gave him a beginning of a middle name with "S."

I'll be liberal with this translation, but you'll get it you haven't already.

Seems Harry and Bess and some swells were meandering about the White House lawn as Harry gesticulated here and there toward wonderfully flourishing flowers.

He was explaining why they were so healthy. And a woman with tender ears told Bess Harry'd do well to use the word 'fertilizer' instead of 'manure.'

Bess, and bless her, told the woman she had no idea how long it had taken her to get Harry to use 'manure.'

He was always an easy man to understand. We'd be better off if that facility of speaking directly were more in vogue and voice today.

FROM THE KITCHEN

by JOAN PINKHAM

"Don't harvest the corn 'til the water's boiling," is an old saying that applies to all our garden vegetables. The freshest are the most nutritious, but even they can be ruined in the cooking. With most veggies, you'll get the most food value by eating them raw, for cooking in water causes the vitamins and minerals to break down or leach out. Two things to remember: use as little water as possible and cook the vegetables as quickly as possible. By doing this, you will retain much of the Vitamins B and C, iron and potassium. Raw vegetables may be served as an appetizer and here is Judith Hurley's dressing, fragrant with herbs. This recipe is for one cup, has 4.5 calories per tablespoon and may be used as an hors d'oeuvres dip, salad dressing, or as a side dish with cold chicken or poached fish.

DILLED CUCUMBER DRESSING

1/2 C. cucumber, peeled, seeded, finely chopped
1/2 Tsp. cider vinegar
1/2 C. yogurt
1 Tsp. Dijon-style mustard
1 T. minced fresh chives
1 T. minced dill

Combine all ingredients in medium-size bowl. Keeps for four days.

"Fresh from the sea" is how we spoiled New Englanders like our fish, but because of its strong, oily taste, some of us can't get terribly excited when bluefish are in season. Because one of our nieces is marrying into the Vincent Cantania family, owners of the Daniel Webster Inn in Sandwich and three Harp and Kettle restaurants, I was able to snag this recipe, certain to make bluefish lovers of us all. Robbie, one of six Catanias who with their parents operate their popular Cape restaurants, has just graduated from the Culinary Institute of America and this is what he suggests with a seven - pound filet of

BLUEFISH A LA ROBBIE CATANIA

1/4" deep incisions (cross pattern)
3 T. peanut or safflower oil
2 T. rice wine vinegar
2 T. lemon juice
2 Tsp. each minced ginger and diced garlic
1 small bunch scallion, diced (greens and white)
1/4 C. tamari soy sauce
1 T. oyster sauce

Pinch of oriental hot oil, curry, fresh tarragon, basil, allspice. Salt and pepper. Whisk all ingredients together for marinade. Marinate in above mixture for two hours and barbecue or broil. Baste while cooking.

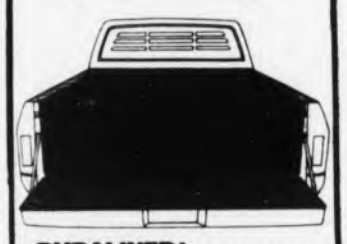
If you're out weeding the vegetable patch, or on the bounding main trolling for our native fish, the kitchen is the last place you want to be on a hot summer's day. Time enough for substantial oven meals and elaborate desserts when appetites are heartier, so early in the morning, why not prepare this dessert from Margaret Ward:

MANDARIN ANGEL PIE

3 egg whites
1/4 Tsp. cream of tartar
1 C. sugar
1 Pkg. (3 oz.) lemon pudding mix
1/2 C. sugar
1/4 C water
3 egg yolks, beaten slightly
1 can (11 oz.) mandarin oranges
1 T. fresh lemon juice
1/2 C. whipping cream, whipped



Beat egg whites and cream of tartar to soft peaks. Gradually add the 1 C. sugar, beating to stiff peaks. Spread on bottom and sides of well-greased 9" pie plate. Bake at 275 degrees for one hour. Turn off oven and with door closed, leave in oven for two hours. Combine pudding mix, 1/2 sugar and water. Blend in egg yolks. Drain orange sections, reserving syrup. Add lemon juice and to syrup add enough water to make 1 3/4 C. Stir into pudding mixture. Cook and stir over medium heat until thick. Cool and fold in whipped cream and 3/4 C. orange sections cut in halves. Set aside remainder. Spoon into meringue shell. Chill several hours or overnight. Top with additional whipped cream and orange sections.

Fishing report

FRESHWATER

Largemouth Bass: warming waters and the end of spawning will see good, active feeding this month with shallow ponds producing big bass first. Use spinner baits, rubber frogs, worms, and top water plugs at night. Hula poppers, jitterbugs, etc.

Smallmouth Bass: will slow down in July and big fish will seek colder, deeper water in local lakes. Night and early morning will be best times to catch bigger fish. Use deep running crank bait lures like rebels, rapalas, shad raps, etc. or shiners and minnows fished on the bottom.

Trout: warm weather trout fishing is for the deep water ponds only as the trout will seek deeper holes in the lakes to feed in. A good bet is to fish areas that show drop offs close to shore and have a rocky or a sandy bottom near by. Trolling rebels, rapalas, spinners, night crawlers, and small streamer flies will still produce good fish and the shore fisherman should concentrate on small minnows and night crawlers fished on or near bottom.

Pickeral: shiners, minnows, flashing lures and spinning minnow lures produce good fish in July as this is the month pickeral move in near lily pads and weeds to feed in shallow, warm water. One of my favorite lures is the Rapala Shallow Runner.

Sunfish and Perch: good summer fun for all ages. Worms, small dry flies and small spinners are a good bet to fill a stringer for the youngsters.

Adams Sports and Tackle has a good selection of fishing tackle to make your summer fishing vacation a complete success.

THE NO-COMPROMISE SOLUTION TO BUYING AN AUTOMOBILE.

When you lay out a substantial amount of money for an automobile, you should get what you want. Buying a car shouldn't be an exercise in making sacrifices.

Saab doesn't ask you to give up anything.

Superb handling and performance have made the Saab 900 one of Europe's most respected sports sedans. But that performance is delivered in return for little gas* and less fuss by a reliable two-liter engine. And unlike many other high-performance cars, the Saab is perfectly at home in the workaday world. Four adults can travel comfortably all day in a Saab, or the rear two seats can be folded flat to add extra space for cargo.

We'll be happy to tell you about a lot of other features that you won't have to give up when you buy a Saab.

SAAB
The most intelligent car ever built.

Delay in moratorium bylaw

By Jane Lane

Unlike the remainder of the zoning bylaws passed at the April Town Meeting, the state Attorney General's office has not yet approved the proposed watershed building moratorium district.

In a letter dated July 2, Assistant Attorney General Henry O'Connell notified the town clerk that zoning bylaw articles 32, 33, 36, 38, 39 and 40 had been approved by his office. In addition, he requested that several questions be answered before his office made any determination on article 43, the so-called watershed building moratorium article.

Town Counsel Richard Henderson is in the process of replying to those inquiries.

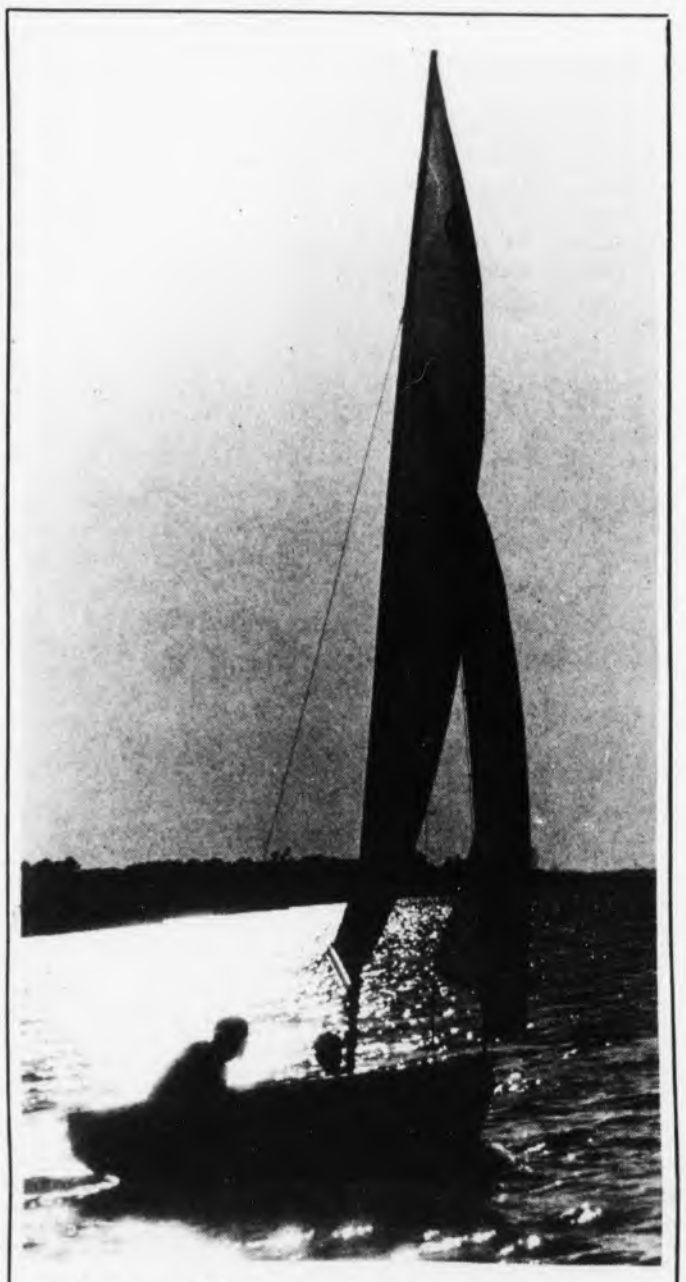
The construction moratorium remains in effect after receiving overwhelming approval by residents at the town meeting. Enforcement Officer Edward Poskus has not issued a single building permit within that district. The procedure will continue to be followed unless and until he is notified the article did not meet with the attorney general's approval.

According to Planning Board Chairman Christine Bassett whose committee sponsored the article, the attorney general's questions pertain more to procedural issues, rather than the content of the article. "Nothing was said about the article's content. It was more a question of whether the board held a public hearing, was there adequate public notice, were the correct maps available to the public, and was the text of the article available at Town Hall," she explained.

The attorney general also requested the Town Clerk provide more information as to when the town meeting warrant was signed, and when the maps delineating the watershed area were made available to the public at that Town Hall office.

The legal process requires that all zoning bylaws be reviewed by the attorney general. Town Clerk Frances Marks submitted that material to the state April 29 following the April 7 meeting.

The attorney general issued a reply July 2 indicating his approval of the majority of zoning amendments, but delayed any decision on the watershed article.



A spokesman for the attorney general's office said there would be no comment on the status of the article until a determination is finalized. Because the decision is pending, there will be no public discussion of the issues involved, according to spokesman David Wood.

Peter Pratt, chairman of water commission, emphasized that during the state's review of the article, there would be no building permits issued in the watershed moratorium area. Although the commission holds no authority to prohibit the issuance of building permits, it was their understanding that Poskus has not and will not approve any permits.

If the article ultimately fails state approval, there would be nothing to bar the issuance of permits for that area. According to Poskus, there are several developers waiting in anticipation, ready to file for permits if the construction moratorium does not meet state requirements.

Pratt agreed with that assessment, and noted that the water department frequently receives calls from developers interested in the land surrounding

Planners request plan extension

On the advice of town counsel, the planning board was scheduled to request a six-week extension on the deadline to approve the proposed Lily Pond Estates subdivision.

While a special town counsel is investigating numerous land titles within the property, the planning board is under a deadline to decide whether to approve the proposed development. Legally, they must decide by July 31, but a land plan will take about a month to six weeks, Town Counsel Richard Henderson explained to the board Monday night.

The planning board was scheduled to request that developers Aaron Rosenberg and Edward Britt approve the extension at its meeting Wednesday night.

In addition, the Board of Selectmen voted Monday night to allow an article for the fall special town meeting which requests that the town acquire the 36-acre parcel by eminent domain. Proposed by the water commission, the land taking is designed to protect encroachment of pollutants into the town's water supply at Lily Pond.

The commission officially voted last Friday night to request the landtaking. The commission's concerns center on the possible pollution of the water supply via the development, and the denial of various easements and rights-of-way historically maintained by the town's water department.

The members maintain that the revised Lily Pond Estates plan utilizes the current water department driveway as a private access into the proposed development.

In a meeting with selectmen Monday night, it was agreed that at special town meeting to be held sometime this fall, residents will be asked to acquire the 36-acre parcel by eminent domain. Although they agreed to insert the article into the warrant, selectmen emphasized they have not yet voted whether to recommend the request.

The board also approved a second request by the water commission to hire a special town counsel to determine the town's rights-of-way within the Lily Pond Estates property, including the disputed driveway access.

Town Counsel Richard Henderson and Water Commission Chairman Peter Pratt agreed the matter would be settled more quickly if another attorney was brought in. A specialist in land matters will finalize the project sooner than town counsel who has many separate matters to review.

Henderson explained in his meeting with the planning board this week that the land plan was a good idea for both the town and the developers. It is best that the disagreements over the easements and rights-of-way were settled once and for all, without the developers themselves having to definitely prove they own the land.

Pratt explained that the community's growing awareness of the need to preserve its water supply has spurred the commission's intent to protect it. "We need to properly secure the watershed, and a lot of people in town are talking about this need. It's up to the water commission to do that. The community has expressed its concern," Pratt stated.

Acquiring the land by eminent domain is a complicated solution to a problem viewed from every angle, according to Pratt. After several weeks of communication between town boards and officials, the commission decided to take "the most drastic step" and request eminent domain action.

If the town aproves the request at the fall special

Voulez-vous francais?

Selectmen were in a bit of a quandry last week when they received a letter from our sister city of Souppes-Sur-Loing in France.

Knowing that our sister community was eager to send residents here for a visit, and for us to reciprocate, selectmen were anxious to learn the contents of this latest message. Trouble was, the letter was written in French. And no one in the Town Hall forces could accurately transcribe each word of the communication.

After seeking the help of an ex-French teacher in the Mariner offices, we deciphered the letter.

There is no need to worry - just yet. There will be no mass invasion of our town in the near future, although they are making definite moves.

Addressed to Selectmen Chairman Frank England, M. Victor Prudhome, mayor of Souppes-Sur-Loing, extended his greetings to the newly-installed chairman of the board. The honorable mayor also thanked the community for its reception of M. Dine at our annual town meeting in April, and throughout his four-day stay in Cohasset.

When Mssr. Dine returned to France, he told the municipal leaders of Souppes-Sur-Loing about his enjoyable visit. About thirty officials attended this meeting, according to the mayor. At that meeting, it was decided to form a special committee to oversee and promote the exchange of citizens between their country and ours.

To advance this exchange of adults and students, he wrote, the French committee has suggested that Cohasset proceed in the same manner. If residents of Cohasset are willing to visit Souppes-Sur-Loing, they will be most willing to invite us. Mssr. Prudhome extended a personal invitation to Chairman England and his wife to visit with the exchange group.

The project, he explained, would enhance the cultural and tourist exchange of citizens. Participants in the program would include adults with their families and young students.

The mayor then asked who or what group the French committee should contact in Cohasset to begin plans for the exchange project.

Cohasset selectmen are expecting their own official translation of the letter before they respond to the latest correspondence.

"We better make it quick," Selectman Mary Jane McArthur noted at their Monday night meeting. "What if they're saying they'll be here in a couple of weeks?"

Cohasset's week . . .

Conservation actions

The Conservation Commission has requested that Town Counsel Richard Henderson initiate legal action against two residents accused of illegally filling wetlands.

Last week, commission members urged Henderson to institute court action against Joseph A. Rosano of 107 Sohier Street. He is charged with illegally filling in wetlands at that address.

The commission's action is separate from the Building Inspector's attempt to halt any filling by Rosano. Earlier this month the inspector obtained a temporary restraining order against Rosano which prohibits any further filling of the area. Inspector Edward Poskus has requested that the court order Rosano to remove all fill previously dumped at the site.

The commission has also requested that Atty. Henderson initiate legal action against Theodore A. Ingemanson of 441 King Street. The commission charged that Ingemanson has illegally filled in wetlands at that address.

Although the Building Inspector notified Ingemanson of this violation, and requested him to desist any further filling and remove all debris from the site, the resident failed to answer the request.

The commission also received a letter from a King Street abutter who expressed concern with the filling and its possible flooding effects. The commission members noted that Ingemanson has taken no action in regard to the Building Inspector or the commission's communications. According to the commission, Ingemanson must file a Notice of Intent with the board, or a court order will be issued against him demanding the site be returned to its previous condition.

Bridge renovations

There will be a public hearing July 30 at 8:30 p.m. at the Bates Building regarding a proposal to rehabilitate the Cunningham Bridge on Atlantic Avenue.

The Conservation Commission will hold the public hearing which has been filed by Highway Surveyor Harold Litchfield.

Attorney fees

Special Town Counsel Mark DeGiacomo has filed a $7416 bill with the Board of Selectmen for legal services rendered to the town. DeGiacomo has acted as special counsel in various actions the town has taken against William Figueiredo of Parker Avenue.

The first portion of the bill amounted to $4687 for services rendered from January 11 through May 31 in connection with an appeal filed by Figueiredo of a Zoning Board of Appeals decision, and a subsequent trial case.

The second part of the bill amounted to $1850 for services rendered from March 25 to May 31 in connection with a boundary dispute with Figueiredo. The bill reflects DeGiacomo's services regarding the issuance of a temporary restraining order and preliminary injunction hearings.

The last portion of the bill is for legal services rendered from January 14 through May 31 in connection with the anticipated contempt proceedings to be brought against Figueiredo regarding the setting of docking facilities contrary to a judgment of the Superior Court.

Another algae problem

A Little Harbor Road resident has appealed to the director of the Department of Environmental Quality Engineering (DEQE) to assist in solving an algae problem on Little Harbor.

Darrell Roberts of 44 Little Harbor Road first contacted selectmen about the problem in a letter written May 18. He asked at that time that selectmen help solve the "almost unbearable" algae condition in the water surrounding his home. Roberts purchased the residence in September, 1983.

At that time Roberts asked if there was anything the state could do to help the situation. He also offered his assistance in relieving the condition.

Because selectmen never replied to his communication, Roberts sent a letter to DEQE on July 1. In that letter he stated, "Our particular area is badly in need of professional assistance and hopefully you can give us direction and a possible solution to the problem." He also noted that selectmen previously discussed a similar situation at Straits Pond and have worked toward alleviating that condition.

Selectmen vow to follow law

Reacting to a directive from the District Attorney, the Board of Selectmen resolved this week to strictly comply with the provisions of the state Open Meeting Law.

The board adopted a formal resolution which declared their intention to follow the state mandate. The resolution was enacted after Norfolk County Assistant District Attorney Charles Hely proposed the action, in response to a complaint to his office regarding a May 4 executive session called by the Board of Selectmen.

John McNabb Jr. issued a formal complaint to the District Attorney's office, saying the session was in violation of the state's Open Meeting Law. It was during that session that selectmen decided to initiate procedures to combine the two positions of town accountant and executive secretary.

Atty. Hely, in a letter dated July 12 to the board, noted "the opportunity for public scruntiny of discussing such a proposal is especially important since it contemplates a permanent change in the very structure of town government."

As an alternative to a Superior Court suit against the board for its action, Atty. Hely recommended selectmen "conduct at its next meeting a full, open discussion of the matters discussed in executive session May 4.

"The board should also consider adopting a formal resolution to recognize and strictly adhere to the seven limited purposes for which an executive session can be lawfully held."

At Monday night's meeting, each of the selectmen reviewed the discussions and actions taken during the May 4 closed meeting. That meeting was held a week after selectmen interviewed Don Andrew. After several informal conversations between board members, the idea developed to combine the two vacant positions and to offer it to Andrew.

The May 4 meeting was scheduled to discuss the proposal with members of the advisory committee in attendance.

Both Diane Sullivan and Cliff Mitman proposed the concept, after agreeing that Andrew met the qualifications for both positions. The move would prove economical for the town and would ensure filling the two positions, one of which had been vacant for many months.

Although not in attendance May 4, Selectman Rocco Laugelle emphatically stated the board never did anything underhanded or dishonest.

Although initially against the proposal, Selectman Mary Jane McArthur said Andrew's superior qualifications, his experience in a similar combined position, and the longterm vacancy of an executive secretary, swayed her to approve the concept.

"Selectmen went through a tough winter. The importance of filling the two positions immediately, far outweighed my initial concerns," she stated.

In its resolution, the board vowed to adhere to Chapter 39, Section 23B, the Open Meeting Law, and will only conduct executive sessions for seven reasons as outlined in the state law. Those reasons for allowing a closed meeting include sessions in which the reputation or health, rather than professional competence of an individual is discussed; to consider the discipline or dismissal or consider charges against a public officer, employee, staff member or individual, as long as that person is notified the discussion will take place; to discuss collective bargaining or litigation strategy; to discuss the deployment of security personnel or devices; to investigate charges of criminal misconduct; to consider the purchase or lease of real property if the discussion may have a detrimental effect on the negotiating position of the town; to comply with the provisions of any general or special law.

Selectmen also agreed that except in an emergency situation, when discussing pending litigation the specific case name and docket number will be set forth in the agenda of the meeting. They also approved that when discussing collective bargaining strategy, the particular labor contract to be discussed will be set forth in the notice and agenda of the meetings.

Selectmen agreed that they will consult with town counsel prior to the posting of a notice and agenda of any meeting at which an executive session is to be held to determine that any topic to be considered in executive session is permitted by the Open Meeting Law.

ONE'S OWN RECOGNIZANCE

A recognizance is a recorded obligation generally entered into before a court. When entered, one promises to perform a certain act or follow a particular course of conduct. For instance, a debtor may enter into a recognizance in which he agrees to pay money that he owes. In criminal law, an individual found guilty of an offense can be required to enter into a recognizance in which he binds himself to keep the peace in the future. An accused may be permitted to go free before trial without posting a bail bond. He must give the court a formal written statement declaring that he will pay the court a specified amount of money if he fails to appear for trial. This is a release "upon one's own recognizance."

Chiropractic for HEALTH

TOUCHING A NERVE

When asked what a chiropractor is, many people respond: "A doctor who does something to a patient's bones." As far as it goes, the answer is correct. It must be understood, however, that the skeletal system in general, and the spine in particular, is the framework through which nerves pass from the brain to different parts of the body. It is this nervous system that controls all of the other systems of the body. Should the spine be in an abnormal position, it could result in an irritation to the nerve trunk which could (in)directly affect any organ or function in the entire body. A fuller view of the chiropractor's role shows him or her to be involved with much more than the bones of the back. Your entirety is his interest.

An approach of total health concern is what will be found when you seek a chiropractic exam. For immediate difficulties or as preventive measures, you will find the chiropractic exam geared to helping your body achieve maximum natural function thus enabling you to enjoy life and health free from discomforts. The science of chiropractic serves to deal with the source of problems rather than merely eliminate unfavorable symptoms. For your healthstyle and lifestyle goals, we invite you to call

Selectmen deny temporary mooring request

Selectmen listened to yet another complaint regarding this summer's crackdown of the harbor mooring regulations. But as in the other instances, they did not back down from their support of the harbormaster and his enforcement of those rules.

Monday night, James Clinton of Parker Avenue, asked for relief after he was ordered to take his boat from the harbor. A 24-year mooring holder, Clinton admitted he had purchased a 25-foot boat last year, although he still had the mooring for a 19-foot boat. He requested that selectmen or the harbormaster issue him a temporary mooring until he is issued the permanent 26-foot mooring site.

He applied for a 26-foot mooring last year, but noted there are currently more than 50 boatowners ahead of him on the waiting list for moorings. Clinton noted that since he has been in the harbor for 24 years, he should have some sort of priority on that list.

When he launched his 25-foot sailboat July 5, he attached his boat to a vacant 34-foot mooring. It was then that Harbormaster Harry Ritter ordered the boat from the harbor.

Ritter explained that according to his records, two years ago Clinton sold his 19-foot boat and purchased the larger vessel. But in April, 1985, he paid $57 for a 19-foot mooring and in May, he came to Ritter and picked up the decal issued for a 19-foot boat. Clinton illegally put that decal on the 25-foot boat, Ritter stated.

"Others have been ordered to get their boats out of the harbor," he said to Clinton as he read the name of 21 boatowners who received similar notice from the harbormaster. "But they are not looking for relief and some have been in the harbor as long as you. This is negligence on your part, knowing that someday you would have a larger boat and you could have been on the waiting list sooner."

Ritter said if temporary moorings were issued, he would give it to the person at the top of the waiting list. "There is no exception to the rule," he said.

Clinton wondered if he left the harbor, what assurance there would be that he would get back in, and when would he be back on a mooring. He noted the moorings are constantly changing, and it's difficult to keep up with the moorings and people waiting for them. "Where do I stand if I leave?" he asked Ritter, explaining to selectmen, "I am here to plea that we get away from the foot standard (for mooring assignment), if the boat can swing on a mooring and it is practical to stay there. I am requesting a temporary mooring for July and August."

Selectmen quickly denied the request, saying they were sympathetic to his longtime use of the harbor, but there could be no exceptions to the harbor rules. Unless the rules are being enforced unfairly, selectmen have no authority to overstep the harbormaster's actions regarding the mooring regulations, they stated.

In other action Monday night, selectmen approved a request from the Recreation Commission to install two signs for the Beechwood playground area. Executive Secretary Don Andrew will review selectmen's budget, and locate the $130 necessary to purchase the signs marking the 20 m.p.h. zone. If the money is not available, a transfer will be requested from the advisory committee.

The board also approved the location of a telephone company vault at North Main Street and Jerusalem Road, on the condition that New England Telephone first landscape the other four sites where similar vaults are located in town.

Selectmen discussed at length the company's failed assurances that the locations would be landscaped. A spokesman for the company promised that selectmen would know this week the landscaping company hired by the telephone company to work at the vault areas, including Beechwood Street near Cushing Plaza, the intersection of Route 3A and Pond Street, the intersection of Todd Road and Beechwood Street, and Elm Street by Stephen's Lane.

The vault on North Main Street will be located underneath the ground, with a two-foot hatch above-ground. Tree and Park Superintendent Peter Laugelle told selectmen there is a site in that vicinity which is a better location for the vault. Selectmen said neighbors should be apprised of the work, and the location of the vault.

The board decided not to accept a gift of land from the Parker family unless $338 in back taxes are paid on the property. Adhering to their policy, selectmen said they could not accept the land without the taxes paid and the property surveyed by the owners.

The Parker family, whose land is located on Beechwood Street, no longer live in the area. But Selectman Mary Jane McArthur noted that if the taxes are not paid, the land will eventually revert to the town. Noting that the taxes have two years in which to be paid, McArthur suggested that selectmen wait another year until the land becomes town property.

After a discussion about the proper pay schedule, selectmen approved Town Accountant Don Andrew's recommendation that Nancy Anne Noonan be hired as junior accountant, but postponed a decision to hire Mary Barbuto as assistant town accountant.

Andrew recommended Barbuto, currently working in the office as junior accountant, at a salary of $7.87 per hour. That salary is a C-8 step 3 on the salary schedule for town employees. She is currently at a C-7 step 1 level.

Andrew was unaware Barbuto recently had a step increase, but noted he would maintain his original recommendation to the personnel board.

Selectmen postponed a decision to approve the recommendation until Andrew finds when Barbuto received the latest step raise, and what salary former Assistant Town Accountant Kay Conte received before she left the position earlier this

Delay in approval

the Lily Pond - Aaron River reservoir sites. But since public notice of the proposed moratorium was first published last winter, construction in that area has been prohibited.

If the article does not pass state approval, Pratt said there will undoubtedly be several developers waiting in line to locate on the property.

The commission has been eager to proceed with a construction moratorium to protect the town's water supply which is located within the watershed district. The moratorium was designed to prohibit any further development in the watershed district until an on-going engineering study is completed. Once Camp, Dresser and McKee finalize their report of the watershed, a permanent zoning bylaw regulating that district will be established.

The water commission, the major proponents of the building moratorium, is eager to stop any further development of the watershed until that bylaw is in effect.

"It's impossible to speculate what will happen if this article does not pass the attorney general's review," Chairman Pratt noted. "The water commission has been the major proponent of this thing. And I have stated we were the ones to carry the ball. If there is a procedural problem with the article, then I take full responsibility. If it turns out this thing doesn't pass, then I take full responsibility. What we have been trying to do has taken a lot of cooperation among town boards, and I don't want anyone pointing the finger at anyone.

"If it doesn't turn out, then we will have to go back to work. But as of today, the moratorium remains in effect."

National Scout Jamboree

Over 35,000 scouts and scouters will assemble and engage in various scouting activies for 10 days at the 11th National Scout Jamboree at Fort A.P. Hill, Virginia. The local contingent joins other Scouts from the South Shore area, making up a troop of thirty-six Boy Scouts from the Old Mills District of the Old Colony Council.

The adult leaders for the Jamboree from the Old Colony District include: from Cohasset, Arthur Lehr, Scoutmaster for the Jamboree, who also participated in past jamborees in 1937 and 1969; and Merle Brown, Assistant Scoutmaster. Other assistant scoutmasters include: Al Taylor (Hanover), Paul Peterson, Jr. (Hull), and Davis Hall, Jr. (Hingham). The seven scouts from Cohasset's Troop 28 are: William Anstead, David Farrag, Mark Lavange, Michael Lelecas, Nichols Lelecas, Chris McElroy and Matthew Silvia.

While enroute to the Jamboree a stopover will be made in New York City and two days will be spent touring Washington, D.C.

The opportunity to attend the 1985 Jamboree is the chance of a lifetime for a scout. National Jamborees are held every four years.

The scouts will live in tents and do their own cooking. All regions of the U.S. will be engaged in games and activities with each other to encourage scouts meeting from other parts of the country and foreign countries. Volleyball champions will be developed through a round-robin of competition with patrols from throughout the nation. Swap items from this area will be taken to the Jamboree by Cohasset scouts for exchange gifts from other parts of the country.

The Scrambler is coming.

The Scrambler will turn your dish into a $2,000 mistake.

They didn't believe it in California. They doubted reports that the most popular cable pay channels would scramble their signals. Instead, they listened to the dish antenna salesman. "It'll never happen," he said. Boy, was he wrong.

Last month, California dish owners turned to HBO and it was gone.

Now Showtime, Cinemax, and the other pay channels are set to scramble too. Before you know it, The Scrambler will be here.

Let's face it, if you've got a dish and The Scrambler comes, what have you got? On the other hand, if you've got American Cablesystems and The Scrambler comes, you've still got top quality programs and excellent service. And no $2,000 dinosaur sitting in your yard.

So, whether you own a dish or not, American Cablesystems of Cohasset is here to help you. To get all the information you need, call us at 383-0604 now. Quick. Before The Scrambler gets here.

town meeting, the purchase price will have to be negotiated and funding appropriated.

Pratt is hanging his hopes on a piece of proposed state legislation known as the Land Bank.

The legislation would enable a municipality to issue a two percent charge on all real estate transactions. Using fiscal 1985 figures, if the land bank had been in effect, Pratt said the town would currently have $650,000 from the $35 million in real estate sold last year in Cohasset. That sum would have been set aside in this separate account to be used for such things as taking property by eminent domain.

If the legislation is approved within the next two weeks, the proposed landtaking will cost the Cohasset tax rolls nothing, he noted. Rep. Mary Jeanette Murray and Sen. William Golden have indicated their support of the legislation.

The commission chairman emphasized that the proceedings to halt the development of Lily Pond Estates will take the continued cooperation of many municipal boards. In fact, the commission originally requested town counsel's opinion whether it was legal to enjoin the planning board from approving the plan currently before that committee.

Atty. Henderson recommended the creation of the land title plan and a request that the planning board attempt to delay any decision until that plan is complete. The board agreed to request the deadline extension when they meet with the developers Wednesday night.

Henderson also explained that the water commission agreed the best course would be to complete the land title search while the planning board delay any action on the proposed development.

"We are in total cooperation with the planning board," Pratt stated this week. "We are both trying to protect the town. The planning board is trying to do their best, while we are trying to file for eminent domain."

In a letter addressed to the planning board last week, Pratt outlined the commission's concerns with the proposed development. In the correspondence, Pratt cited several technical reasons why the development would have a deleterious effect upon the town's drinking water supply.

"The normal use of road salt, fertilizer products, petroleum products, and other substances by the proposed residents of this subdivision would cause the direct surface and ground water discharges from the site to travel in a rapid fashion into the declared public water supply of Lily Pond," Pratt stated in his letter to the planning board. He then outlined several technical reasons why the chemicals would be easily accessible to the water supply area.

"The town boards and officials are really behind us on this," he explained this week. "People have really come out against this development because of its effect upon their water supply. If the Land Bank goes through, it won't cost the tax rate anything to take this land. The cost of taking this land is nothing compared to what it would cost us the rest of our lives if this development goes through."

Carillon concert

There will be a summer carillon concert from St. Stephen's Church Sunday, July 28 from 4 to 5 p.m. Carolyn Reiser of Jacksonville, Fla. will be the carillonneur.

Reiser began her carillon studies as an undergraduate at Yale University. In 1983 she was awarded a Summer Traveling Fellowship by Yale to study and play carillons in Belgium, Germany and The Netherlands. She recently returned from Frankfurt, Germany where she spent the past year studying philosophy as a Fulbright Scholar. There she gave a series of carillon recitals last month in Johannesburg Castle, Aschaffenburg.

Among the selections Reiser will play Sunday include three folksongs, "Amazing Grace," and two pieces by Scott Joplin.

New art center classes in August

The month of August ushers in two new and exciting courses as well as welcoming a new face to the teaching staff of the South Shore Art Center.

Artist/instructor Phyllis Murphy Szerejko returns to the Center after being gone for more than a decade, to teach two courses during the second session of the summer schedule. Second session gets underway August 5 at the Center, 103 Ripley Road in Cohasset. Advanced registration is required for all Center classes or workshops.

Szerejko's courses are Painting and Drawing Indoors and Out for beginners and intermediate artists, meeting Monday and Wednesday beginning Aug. 5 from 9:30 a.m. to 12:30 p.m. and Gaining a New Vision in Art and Nature, meeting Monday and Wednesday, Aug. 5 - 21 from 1 to 3:30 p.m.

Her painting class is designed to present the character and use of line, scale, texture, color, shape and form. She will explore how these elements combine, support, and complement each other and she will intermesh drawing and painting together. Group critiques will be given.

Her course Gaining a New Vision is a new approach to understanding design and aesthetics for non artists and artists. The course will culminate with a guided museum trip designed to create new awareness for the students. Lectures, slides and field trips guided by the instructor will cover design, texture, and color in nature and how these elements relate to a universal and personal language. The museum trip offers an opportunity to share observations of the previous five sessions and for the individual's personal aesthetic to unfold through observing a wide variety of art.

Her two Center courses add a new dimension to the summer schedule. Also occurring in August are David Tandy's two popular courses - Introductory Drawing and Introductory Painting, both meeting Tuesday and Thursday beginning August 6 from 7:15 to 10:15 p.m., for the absolute beginner and anyone wishing a fundamental grounding in drawing skills.

Virginia Avery's Outdoor Watercolor will meet Wednesday and Friday, beginning Aug. 7 from 9:30 a.m. to 12:30 p.m. This course in watercolor is designed to help students to better develop needed painting skills encouraging individual expression.

Three one-week workshops also grace the August schedule. Bety Kohlberg's Self-Expressive Drawing will meet July 29. 30, and Aug. 1 and 2 from 9:30 a.m. to 2:30 p.m. Designed for intermediate and advanced artists, she will concentrate on "draw with color" from an emotional point of view rather than an explicit rendering of form.

Margaret Dillon's Landscape Painting Problems meeting Tuesday and Thursday, August 6, 8, 13, and from 9:30 a.m. to 12:30 p.m. concentrates on composition, color and design. Ann Murphy's Painting Water, August 19, 21, and 23 meeting from 9:30 a.m. to 12:30 p.m. is a special workshop for those who have basic drawing and painting skills and would like to focus on the water.

The Center's young artist department offers Lisbeth Koopman-Wyman's Paint and Draw Outside for ages seven to 11, Tuesday and Thursday, beginning August 6 from 2 to 3:30 p.m. Students will learn about design, composition, and color using craypas, tempera, and watercolors. Young artists will learn basic drawing and painting skills in projects geared to their age level.

For further information, contact the South Shore Art Center at 383-9548.

Family story hours

The Paul Pratt Memorial Library invites school-age children and their parents to a Family Story Hour Monday, July 29 at 7:30 p.m. This is the fourth in a series of five evening programs for family enjoyment.

Ms. Laurel Sharp, Children's Librarian at the Swampscott Public Library, will be the guest storyteller. Ms. Sharp combines music with her storytelling. During this performance, she will accompany herself to relate the ballad of "St. Brendan, the Voyager," as well as several Irish narrative songs. She will also tell the well-known story by Rudyard Kipling, "How the Whale Got his Throat."

Ms. Sharp is a second-generation librarian, who has come by her love of story-telling through children's literature. She has performed throughout the Boston Public Library system, at the Gloucester Folk Festival and at International Woman's Day. Her performance will last about an hour.

☐ Sometimes being in the public eye can be embarrassing, especially if you are a lifeguard at Sandy Beach. And, if your post is at the far (Hagerty) end of the beach when the Balloon Clown comes with a bunch of huge balloons and yells out "Happy Birthday to Jill", its very noticeable indeed! Such was the fate of Jill Nedrow last Sunday, when a few of her fine friends surprised her with the bouquet. We're sure that it is one birthday that she will never forget, and hope that it was a happy one!

☐ Gerry Conte, a letter-carrier at the Cohasset Post Office, was a recent recipient of two awards presented by the United States Postal Service. In recognition of 19 years of accident free driving, Gerry was presented a handsome, fully lined, official Post Office sports jacket. The other award was a Service Award pin indicating creditable government service during his tenure of over 25 years service. Gerry is a life-long resident of Cohasset. Both awards were presented to Gerry by the Postmaster of Cohasset, Edward Fonseca, Jr.

☐ Happy "Big" birthday to the Dickie Abbadessas, both of whom celebrated theirs within a month of each other. We will not say which one is the elder of the two . . .

☐ Congratulations to John Larkin Thompson, president of Blue Shield of Massachusetts, on his recent election to the Greater Boston YMCA Black Achievers Commission. This commission has given both support and council to over 15,000 economically disadvantaged Boston area youths. The youths are placed with adult blacks that serve as role models in providing incentives for education and training in a wide variety of professional career.

☐ Good News "Around Town" was heard last week, when we found out that the Cohasset Chamber of Commerce was planning another "White Christmas in Cohasset". Seems so strange to have to think of such things in the midst of a heat wave, but that is what makes such a venture so successful. The community all takes part, and a grand time is always had by all.

☐ If you catch that elusive blue, and think that it may be a record setter, bring it up to Trask Tackle Shop and have it weighed. . . they are authorized by the State to weigh your catch, and will even provide you the bait to catch them with.

Oooh! That feels so good on such a hot, muggy day as Colin Knox showers at the Town Pool. (Bill Quigley)

☐ John Reidy, Kevin Leary, and Bob Schultz were all on the Bay State scholastic soccer team . . . although the team lost, all three boys agreed that the experience was a thrilling one. Tracy Fitzpatrick competed in the basketball category, Jennifer Martin was a member of the synchronized swimming team that finished second, and Ann Henry won the gold medal in the synchronized swimming event. For a town the size of Cohasset, we certainly had a large representation of athletes at the Bay State Games. Congratulations to all of our stars.

☐ Five athletes could be seen with gold stars on their foreheads last week, if they were given out to swimmers as old as they are! Instead they are named "Star of the Week", and the winners are Katie Carroll, Marisol Perry, Danny Baird, Amie Theriault and Rebecca Kirk. These stars are awarded for dedication, attendance, hard work, and enthusiasm, and should be proud of themselves.

☐ Mary Jeannette Murray was on stage recently, the South Shore Music Circus Stage to be exact. She awarded Ron Rawson, the producer of the Circus, a citation for the fact that it is celebrating its 30th anniversary this season. That is a feat that few realized would take place when the spot was donated and the board of directors all pitched into start a local theatre. May it succeed for another thirty years, with Mr. Rawson's time and efforts making it all possible.

☐Three residents have received honors for the spring term at Skidmore College, a coeducational, liberal arts institution with an enrollment of 2,100 students.

Highest honors are awarded for a quality point ratio of 3.6 or more from a possible 4.01. Honors are awarded for a ratio of 3.2 to 3.59.

Honor students include: Koren A. Lipsett, '85, a daughter of Valerie A. Lipsett of 85 Elm St., Cohasset, highest honors.

Also, Denise M. Sullivan, '87, a daughter of Dr. Albert L. Sullivan of 17 Church St., Cohasset.

☐ Maureen A. Buckley, the daughter of John and Cleida Buckley, has been named to the dean's list at Bates College as a result of her scholastic standing during the second semester of the 1984-85 college year. To qualify for the dean's list, a student must maintain a better than "B" average for the semester, for a minimum quality point ratio of 3.2.

☐ Jacquelyn M. Fahey of 270 S. Main St., the daughter of Mr and Mrs. Joseph Fahey, and a junior at Cohasset High School, has been awarded the Rensselaer Medal by the Rensselaer Polytechnic Institute.

This award is granted annually to high school juniors from each of 1,700 high schools for outstanding achievements in the study of mathematics and science.

☐Jayne Nussdorfer and Fred Koed of Cohasset have successfully completed Course II of the 1985 Realtors Institute of Massachusetts held recently at the Best Western TLC in Waltham. Upon completion of three 30-hour courses, Institute participants receive the nationally-recognized designation GRI (Graduate, Realtors Institute).

☐ Erin Browne of Cohasset is participating in the Boston University Theatre Institute.

Browne, a student at Cohasset High School, is the daughter of Jeff Matherly and Valerie Brown of Schofield Rd.

The Boston University Theatre Institute, now in its sixth year of operation, features six weeks of intensive professional training in acting and dance with working artists. Talented high school and college students, interested adults and teachers from the United States, Canada and several foreign countries take part in the program, which runs from July 1 through Aug. 9.

Classes include acting, audition techniques, singing, directing, jazz dance, improvisation and choreography, among others. Joyce Schmidt, former director of the Eugene O'Neill Theatre Center's Creative Arts in Education division, is director of the Theatre Institute.

☐ That's all the news that's "fit to print" for this week . . . keep it coming.

Committee discusses meeting violation

By Jim Whelan

The Town Government Structure Committee of Cohasset last week responded unfavorably to the idea of combining the two offices of town accountant and executive secretary into one "professional administrator."

The committee concluded that such a move would give one person the powers of disbursing town funds as well as acting as the watchdog, making sure the disbursements are properly expended.

The committee has recently focused its efforts on this issue because the selectmen will propose the change at the next town meeting in the fall. The Board of Selectmen had already tried to combine the two positions this spring, but have been restrained by the district attorney's office.

Edward Donnelly, from the Executive Office of Communities and Development (EOCD), was invited to share the state's point of view, Donnelly told the committee the idea would be a mistake for a town the size of Cohasset.

An executive secretary's function is to initiate projects and see them through to the end, Donnelly explained. Giving that office the power to disburse funds, which is the town accountant's, would create too great a risk of misappropriation of funds, he said.

Donnelly illustrated the point by drawing upon the example of Winchester, Mass., a town which combined the two offices of accountant and secretary. One year, the town undertook the project of refurbishing the town hall, and ran short of money. The executive secretary, eager to complete the project, appropriated additional funds to finish it.

Figures in the town's books and budget had to be juggled to make the additional appropriations legal. This was picked up by the town auditors, and the town had to pay for it.

Donnelly noted the trend to establish "professional administrators" in town governments began 10 to 15 years ago and experienced a groundswell in 1981 with the passage of Proposition 2 1/2. Today, 160 Bay State towns have "professional administrators," said Donnelly. Eighty percent of towns with populations over 7,000 have created such a position combining the two functions of accountant and secretary into one office, detailed Donnelly.

Members of the committee noted that Norwell, which has combined the two offices, is experiencing budget problems this year. Earlier this month, Norwell's advisory board was forced to approve $35,745 in emergency funds because of poor budget management by several town departments.

John O'Donnell, a new member of the Town Government Structure Committee, said the combination of the town offices would create a "functional conflict." Chartis Langmaid questioned the management approach of the idea. John P. Reardon, Jr. predicted combining the two offices would create too many new problems.

The Board of Selectmen have attempted to combine the two positions recently in an effort to save costs. Because of personnel turnover at the Town Hall this spring, the positions of Town Accountant and Executive Secretary opened up. In two executive sessions held this spring, the board voted to combine the two positions and hired Donald Andrew to start work in the new position on June 3.

Because the changes were made in executive session, the move was protested by John K. McNabb, chairman of the Town Government Structure Committee.

McNabb appealed as a private citizen to the Norfolk County District Attorney's office. He contended the Selectmen were in violation of the Municipal Open Meeting Law, which lists the conditions by which a board can go into executive session. The appointment of a town officer is clearly not a condition according to this law, McNabb argued.

In a letter dated July 12, the District Attorney's office informed Frank England, chairman of the Board of Selectmen, that they had indeed violated the law, and that public scrutiny and discussion of what happened during the May executive sessions is necessary.

The District Attorney instructed the selectmen, that as an alternative to a Superior Court suit, the board should conduct at its next meeting a full and open discussion of the matters dealt with in executive session. In other business, the Government Structure Committee briefly discussed the possibility of establishing a Town engineer, who would handle all engineering services for all municipal departments.

Donnelly suggested the committee could determine the town's need for the position by examining two key factors. How much Cohasset is currently paying for engineering services and if such services are being performed adequately.

In other matters, McNabb was re-elected chairman of the committee. McNabb said one project he wishes to undertake in the coming year is to examine the process by which the town budget is discussed, determined and approved. This would include determining what the procedures are for public discussion in front of the Advisory Committee, said McNabb.

The Town Government Structure Committee will next meet August 20.

Protective move

It appears to be a process bound by time contraints and fueled by controversy. The water commissioners attempt to gain the land known as Lily Pond Estates, will be difficult and complicated.

But the basic reason for acquiring the land is simple. We need to protect the town's present and future drinking water supply.

Surely there is no more sound, altruistic reason. The town is not eager to purchase more land for the sake of acquiring real estate. That is not the town's business.

But the only reason the government exists is to serve the public good. That is the foundation of what will likely be a long and bitter battle to acquire the 36 acres of land off King Street.

The commissioners want the land taken from the current developers solely to protect the Lily Pond reservoir from poisonous pollutants and chemical infiltration.

Some have questioned the commission's timing, saying they have proceeded with a most drastic action late in the game.But CommissionChairman Peter Pratt assured selectmen that they have been set against this development from the start, and related that unwavering statement to the developers several months ago. Ignoring their opposition, the developers initiated plans and only recently revised them for the planning board's review.

Whatever their predessors did or did not accomplish in the past, the present commission intends to do this right. They want to protect all lands susceptible to chemical encroachment through the water supply, and they want these lands so marked.

An interesting aside developed as the commission's request was made last week to acquire the Lily Pond Estates land. In an explanatory letter, the commission outlined the reasons why it is so important not to develop this land. A list of the harmful chemicals and pesticides used by many would prove disastrous if used by a future homeowner on this property, it stated.

That information was supplied to the commission by its engineers currently studying the watershed protection district. Camp, Dresser and McKee are expected to finish that intensive study in time to devise some regulatory bylaws for the April Town Meeting.

It seems to us that such vitally important information released to the commission could have been shared among the public, but more importantly, to the other town boards looking into affected properties. Shouldn't the planning board, for instance, have been told of the deleterious effect of pesticides on lawns before they began their deliberations of Lily Pond Estates? Why keep other boards in the dark about the on-going study, when the public was the source of funding for the project?

We endorse the water commission's continuing efforts to protect our precious water supply, and we will continue to keep close watch on the proceedings. Our only concern is that other boards be apprised of each new development in this latest issue which will affect us all.

NEWS ITEM — Cohasset: Lily Pond development draws environment objections. Residents and officials gather at Planning Board meeting to protect the town's drinking water source from becoming the site of a residential development. 'Present plans inadequate,' says engineer resident. Decrease in number of pond's lily pads, increase in sludge also noted "...Forget that kiss bit, princess...No castle, no prince. I'm all for staying frog-world as long as the lily pads hold out..."

Attend hearing

To the Editor:

At an open hearing at Cohasset Town Hall on Thursday evening, August 1 at 8, the South Shore Art Center will present its plans to the Zoning Board of Appeals for the construction of a new Center on the site of the Tantillo Auto Body shop in downtown Cohasset.

We strongly urge you to come out and encourage the Board to vote in favor of the project. The public hearing forum provides a unique opportunity for supporters of the new Center to show their enthusiasm and commitment. Public endorsement of the proposed plans is vital if we wish to see the Center's plans become a reality.

Recently the Division of Water Pollution Control of the Department of Environmental Quality Engineering denied our request for a modification of the sewer permit on the property. We intend to fight this denial and your attendance at the hearing on August 1 will let our town officials know that the South Shore Art Center has the strong and broad support of the community.

Since 1955, the Center has enriched the lives of children and senior citizens alike; it has provided opportunities to artists and student, and it has been an outlet for literally thousands of people—many of whom may never have stood before an easel in their lives! You can help insure that the Art Center will be able to continue its good work for many years to come.

Plan to be at Cohasset Town Hall on Thursday, August 1 at eight o'clock! Spread the word to your friends and neighbors . . . to everyone who wants to see the South Shore Art Center realize its full potential as a cultural resource for the 45 cities and towns on the South Shore it now serves.

Directors of the South Shore

To the Editor:

We would like to thank the public for the Joe Dee benefit.

A special thank you to Dianne Saferian and Gail Flannery of Dianne's Hair Design, North Scituate who put it all together.

Also our deep appreciation to the following who contributed greatly to its success — the V.F.W. Satuit Post #3169, Arlene Randall, the merchants in North Scituate, Scituate Harbor, Cohasset and Hanover, the media — friends, neighbors, family and buddies of Joe Dee — and last but not least, to all those who did not know Joe, but cared enough to help Joe come home from Colorado.

Letters

The benefit was a tremendous success and we were overwhelmed with everyone's generosity.

Our most sincere thanks,
Betty Dee, Scituate
Jim Dee, Belmont
Veronica Dee Amelang, Scituate
Kate Dee Kator, Colorado

Appreciate it!

To the Editor:

I want to thank you so very much for the wonderful coverage you gave to my institution as new rector of St. Stephen's. You really went the extra mile and I appreciate it greatly.

I hope you are having an enjoyable summer.

Best,
The Rev. E. Clifford Cutler

Red Tide continues

The red tide warning continues throughout the waters of Cohasset. Health Agent Joseph Godzik has heard no further word from the state since the shellfish ban was enacted two weeks ago.

At that time, the red tide contamination was great enough for the state to close all Cohasset and Scituate shores for the harvesting of shellfish. That ban does not include lobsters.

Dr. Godzik said the red tide, which causes paralytic shellfish poisoning if consumed by humans, usually takes about three weeks to clear.

The Department of Environmental Quality Engineering has also issued its monthly statement which prohibits the harvesting of shellfish in the waters and flats of Cohasset Harbor, southwest of the breakwater. This condition has been in effect for more than a year, when a dangerously high fecal chloroform count was discovered in the harbor, near the Margin Street area.

The health agent and sewer plant supervisor have been working closely with residents in that area to detect and alleviate the cause of the pollution. No direct cause has yet been discovered.

Summer mother burnout blues

By Charlotte Carney

Are you tired of playing 'James' the chauffeur; or having your house be the entertainment capitol of the neighborhood? Has the summer soggy weather zapped your zip?

Do you feel it's time to review your job description as Mom, or Mr. Mom, as the case may be? Are you feeling like the guy who makes the donuts?

If so, you are not alone. You may be suffering from "The Summer Mother Burnout Blues."

It's that time of year the school calendar so lightly refers to as 'summer vacation.'

This is the time that Moms have to bring out the big guns, get into full combat gear, and polish up all those skills nobody ever told you you'd have to have, to make it through "The Summer Vacation."

You are on full alert. This is not a test, but the real thing. According to Mrs. Florence Stanford of Jerusalem Road the mother of 10, It's a zoo!"

It's a time when your refrigerator needs a revolving door; when you feel like a short order cook, serving meals in shifts; when your six year old taps you on the shoulder at 7:15 a.m. with his bathing suit on, "YOUR" beach bag packed, ready for the beach; not to leave out the exciting experience of your teenagers all needing the car at the same time.

And don't you just love it when your children compare you to 'So-in-So's mother,' who lets her kids do Everything! "Come on Mom, it isn't fair, we're not allowed to do anything!"

These all too familiar situations may lead even the most experienced combat Mom, to unnecessarily second guess her own judgments.

Now when you're out weeding your garden (because your kids are getting paid to weed Mr. So in So's garden), and you find you're talking to yourself in order to have an intelligent conversation with an adult; hang in there, you may be in for some relief.

How do you spell relief? C.A.M.P. in Wyoming? Not necessarily. There are less drastic measures close at hand.

The Cohasset Recreation Dept. directed by Jack Worley, has some wonderful summer programs that are worth looking into. According to Worley, the varied programs accommodate children from ages four through the teens, as well as special needs youth.

Worley and his staff have put a great deal of time and effort into providing an "all-out" campaign to entertain on a constructive level.

Mothers carefully tend their young as we approach the midst of summer vacation. We'd like to know when Mom's vacation begins.
(Carol McCann)

Entertain? Does that ring a bell? Do you sometimes feel as though you're a cruise director on a ship that doesn't dock?

There is, however another 'life-saver' right in our own community — The Cohasset Swim Center. The center provides morning swimming instructions followed by an open swim from 2 to 5:30 pm. Moms have their time too from noon to 2 p.m. Mary Jo Mahoney of Cohasset, Co-director, remarked that you can see all the anxious little faces waiting by the glass doors at about 1:50 pm. waiting for the fun to begin.

The Swim Center accommodates both the swimmer, and the non-swimmer by providing two pools — one standard, and one three feet deep — to assure the moms of younger children, and those who have not yet mastered swimming techniques, a safe and pleasant afternoon.

For the child who has artistic interests, the South Shore Art Center offers several different afternoon workshops.

The Cohasset Community Center offers a gymnastic 'mini' camp, for children five to 15 years of age.

Finding pleasant, constructive activities for younger children seems almost easy when compared to the seemingly impossible task of coping with the "Summer Teenager."

Now here lies the challenge! The following comments, from several Cohasset moms, seem to echo the thoughts and feelings of many. "Turn off that T.V., and fine Something To Do!""I feel I live at the food store." "The car is always on empty." And the big question for the day for Mom is, "Did you wash my jeans?"

June Cleaver, and Harriet Nelson never seemed to have these problems.

Oh yes, the days of 'Walley' and 'Beav' are gone!

According to Erma Bombeck and other noted authorities on basic 'Momdom,' summer is a time for "No order at all."

Mrs. Dee DeSantis of Forest Avenue, though keeps a healthy outlook on summer. "I've just blown off doing housework."

Things do seem to run more smoothly when you can take the pressures off yourself.

To some, however this can be a serious attack on one's sanity. But rather than allow this temporary intrusion into one's semblance of order, to take on too much importance, you might as well try and put things into prospective and smile, knowing that, "this too shall pass."

Change of life

By Charlotte Carney

Boston,
Boston,
Who said Boston
Did I ever want to go?
Give me a break,
You've got it kids,
The answer was a definite
'No."

"Oh come on," they said
It's great up there
All those Harvard M.B.A.'s
The Berkley crowd
Lobster Bisque
"The" start of 4th of July parades

It's history,
And culture.
Education
The Back Bay
Why there's so much of yesterday,
There's hardly room for today.

And don't worry,
It's New England
You can always get away.
New Hampshire,
The Berkshires,
"Cape Cod is lovely,"
They say

But what they didn't tell me was why I'd want to stay.

The answer isn't tangible,
It isn't pink or green
Copley Place,
Faneuil Hall
Or Boston Magazine

It's what I found inside myself,
The feelings that we're good
It's living where I do
You see
It's my neighborhood!

Cohasset summer sports scene . . .

By Lisa Shumaker

Varsity Girls Basketball

Tuesday the girls creamed Norwell 36-10. Cohasset led by two at the half but came alive in the second half offensively and pulled out of reach. Norwell, on the other hand, went cold and remained scoreless throughout the second half.

Friday the girls lost a heartbreaker to Whitman-Hanson, 36-35. The Skippers made a valiant comeback at the end of the game but their efforts were just too late. Anne O'Leary had a good game, especially off the boards, but the shots just wouldn't fall for Cohasset.

The girls will play their last game of the regular season on Tuesday at 5:30 when they face Weymouth South. After this contest the girls will begin their playoffs.

Flying Scot Race Series

The Flying Scots were off and running Saturday, unfortunately the wind was not. After about two-thirds of the race was completed, the wind died and no skipper was able to finish before the three hour time limit.

However, Sunday the boats were able to sail under a beautiful, moderate seabreeze coming from the east.

Jack McCarthy with his crew Peter McCarthy managed to pull off the win. Peter Chapman and his crew Alan Cooke came in second, followed by Ray Kasperowicz and his crew Bob Davenport and Tad Kasperowicz.

Weather pemitting, the Scots will hopefully continue their series next Saturday.

With sails in full bloom, these racers head toward the finish at Government Island. (Carol McCann)

Varsity Boys Basketball

Tuesday, the boys lost to Blue Hills Technical High School by about 15. Cohasset turned in a good effort but unfortunately were not at full force. David Shumaker did an excellent job of leading the team on offense, and Mat Maloney was tough under the boards, but their performances were not enough to give Cohasset a victory.

Thursday, the boys were defeated by Scituate. Once again loss of manpower was the key to the defeat. However, this did not stop Cohasset from hustling the entire game. Chris Ryan stood out as having a good game that evening.

Tuesday, Cohasset will face Hanover. The team will be at full force by then and be a tough challenge for Hanover. Thursday, the boys will play a talented Marshfield team.

Freshman Boys Basketball

The freshman boys remain Cohasset's only undefeated basketball team this summer. Coach Larry Shultz has been very pleased with his team's playing and is very proud of their unblemished record.

Not only has Cohasset been beating teams, but they have been winning by large margins as well. For instance, the boys beat Marshfield by 11 and Norwell by 15. The team's other game against Duxbury was a little closer, but Cohasset managed to pull away with a seven point lead.

Tuesday, the Skippers face a tough Plymouth Carver team. Shultz believes his team will have to play to their full potential to beat this team.

Wednesday, the boys play another Duxbury team and Thursday Cohasset will try and beat Whitman-Hanson. Hopefully, if the boys continue to play as they have, they will keep their winning streak going.

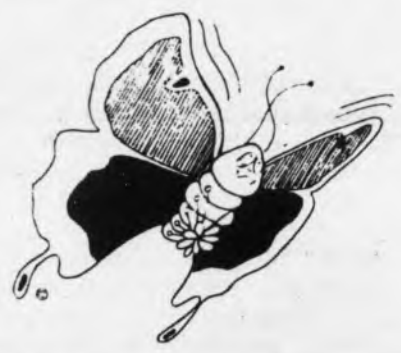
'Barnum' to cast thousands

The Young People's Summer Theatre will present the musical "Barnum" next Thursday, Friday and Saturday, August 1, 2 and 3 at 8 p.m. in Scituate High School.

The group has been performing in Scituate for nine summers and is open to youths between 13 and 22 years old. This year there are more than 70 young people performing.

Barnum marks the group's sixteenth musical since its debut in 1977. Since then over 400 youths have gone through the program and scholarships totalling more than $6,000 have been given out to college-bound students. YPST plans to award $1,200 this summer.



YPST has become somewhat of an annual tradition for Scituate and surrounding towns. Each year thousands attend the performances on even the hottest of August nights in the unair-conditioned Scituate High School.

Don Capen, Administrator, attributes this loyalty to that "the audience knows they're not going to attend an evening of a bunch of kids running around on stage and not knowing what they're doing. If anything, audiences see a touch of amateur professionalism." Recently, YPST won several national awards and its "professionalism" was recognized.

The musical Barnum appeared on Broadway between 1980 and 1982 and won several awards and nominations. Capen likes to produce upbeat contemporary theatre rather than the traditional type, because, as he says, "YPST is an educational theatre and the kids learn much more from this type of show."

Barnum is based on the life of P.T. Barnum and follows his events from 1835 and 1880. Included in the Cy Coleman score are mostly unknown tunes, but melodic ones such as "Colors of My Life" and "Love Makes Such Fools of Us All." There will be the YPST trademark: musical numbers with a "cast of thousands." Capen adds, "just to get all of those kids on stage and looking like they're doing the same thing at one time brings down the house."

Many of the cast members will be handing out balloons to publicize the show, and Opening Night will be Aug. 1. Tickets are available at the door or by calling 871-5831.

Sewer update

By Karen Cubie

Hingham Sewage Commission Chairman John Brandt hopes to discuss a solution to Hingham's waste disposal problem with the state Water Resources Authority, and representatives from Cohasset and Hull at a meeting in Senator Golden's office Friday..

"We haven't heard anything final from the WRA," Brandt said. "I'm requesting that some solution to the problem be discussed."

According to David Margetts of Margetts E.L. & Sons, pumpers have drastically cut their loads.

"We're cutting way down," he said. "We're trying to do just emergency pumping in Hingham. A lot of customers are overflowing and we haven't got to them. We're holding off on all of our automatic customers. We've had a lot of calls from restaurants and other people we can't do. We haven't heard from the schools yet. That might be a problem next month."

Margetts' business has not suffered from the situation.

"We're still pumping in Weymouth and Braintree," he said. "Fortunately, we do repair work, and we install systems. A lot of people are adding to their systems so they won't have to pump as often. Our pumping has slowed down, but our men are busy installing and repairing."

Wetherbee featured in August gallery display

Who's who in photography? Neil Wetherbee, that's who, and his works are displayed at the Scituate Arts Association Gallery through August.

Born and raised on the South Shore, Mr. Wetherbee has changed residence but not his love of the New England scene.

Creative art with a camera as a tool comes as a relatively new thing for Neil, who tackled this difficult medium only 10 short years ago. His accomplishments since then have been impressive, i.e., twice winner of Boston Globe Photo Contest, rated fifth, fourth and fifth in the world for three consecutive years by Photographic Society of America's "Who's Who in Photography," top exhibitor in Photo Expo at deCordova Museum, invited to exhibit internationally (New Zealand, Italy, Hong Kong, Greece), asked to donate to permanent collections at Boston Museum of Science, Photographic Society of America and International Federation of Photographic Art.

Writer and teacher, Wetherbee took up photography as a hobby in 1986, using a Nikkormat, and since then has shown versatility in his subject matter while experimenting considerably with effects.

His forte and first love appear to be New England at its most beautiful, whatever the time of year, and some of his best pictures convey the simple eloquence of dawn in a Vermont village and sunset over rustic harbors at high tide.

The show opened Aug. 4 at the gallery at 134 Front St., Scituate Harbor.

Hours are Tuesday through Saturday, from 10 a.m. to 5 p.m.; Sunday, noon to 5 p.m. and closed Monday.

Opening hours are 2 to 5 p.m. Sunday, Aug. 4.

Scituate Scenes

Through August, the Scituate Arts Association Gallery will go all out with a special show devoted exclusively to the local scene.

Works on display will be in all mediums; oil, watercolor, mixed media, prints and pen and ink. Visitors may be pleasantly surprised to find their own home or their "favorite spot" on exhibit during this time.

Golden and Hynes announce award of minibus line

State Sen. William Golden and State Rep. Frank Hynes have announced the awarding of four converted vans, one 16-20 passenger minibus and nine mobile radios to South Shore Elder Services for use in South Shore communities, including Cohasset, Hull, Hingham, Scituate and Weymouth.

Hynes, a member of the S.S.E.S. Advisory Board stated, "I'm pleased that the Interagency Advisory Committee has recommended the awarding of this equipment to S.S.E.S. Our elderly and disabled persons on the South Shore need the assurance of reliable transportation services to accomodate their needs."

Senator Golden, who from the beginning of the transportation program has served as legal counsel to this private, nonprofit South Shore elderly program, stated, "The awarding of the vans, minibus and the mobile radios if a big boost to the South Shore Elder Services, which serves so many of our elderly residents on the South Shore. It is an important step towards making sure our senior citizens are provided quality transportation when they need it." "The S.S.E.S. should be commended for their leadership in establishing this program", stated Senator Golden. "When Sharon Nohr of S.S.E.S. and I first discussed her idea for this program in February, I was so impressed by her ideas that I assigned two volunteer Aides to ensure the organization and legal incorporation of the program. I am very pleased by the early success of these combined efforts."

Hynes and Golden stated further that it was their intent to work with S.S.E.S. to insure the expansion of the program into a full operating transportation program for all elderly including the fragile and handicapped.

Elder Services van

State Sen. William Golden and State Rep. Frank Hynes have announced the awarding of four converted vans, one 16-20 passenger minibus and nine mobile radios to South Shore Elder Services for use in South Shore communities, including Cohasset, Hull, Hingham, Scituate and Weymouth.

Hynes, a member of the S.S.E.S. Advisory Board stated, "I'm pleased that the Interagency Advisory Committee has recommended the awarding of this equipment to S.S.E.S. Our elderly and disabled persons on the South Shore need the assurance of reliable transportation services to accomodate their needs."

ZBA grants bank system

By Karen Cubie

The Zoning Board of Appeals announced they must grant a permit for a septic system to the Massachusetts Bank for Savings at their Thursday, July 18 meeting.

The Board had denied the request from the Bank four years ago, but had not filed its decision in time. A Superior Court Judge ruled the Board must grant the permit; however, it would still be able to set conditions on the construction of the system.

"The Board of Appeals just goofed," Board member Barbara Power commented. "It didn't file within the alotted ninety days."

The Bank had requested the special permit to build a septic system for a residence on Strait Pond.

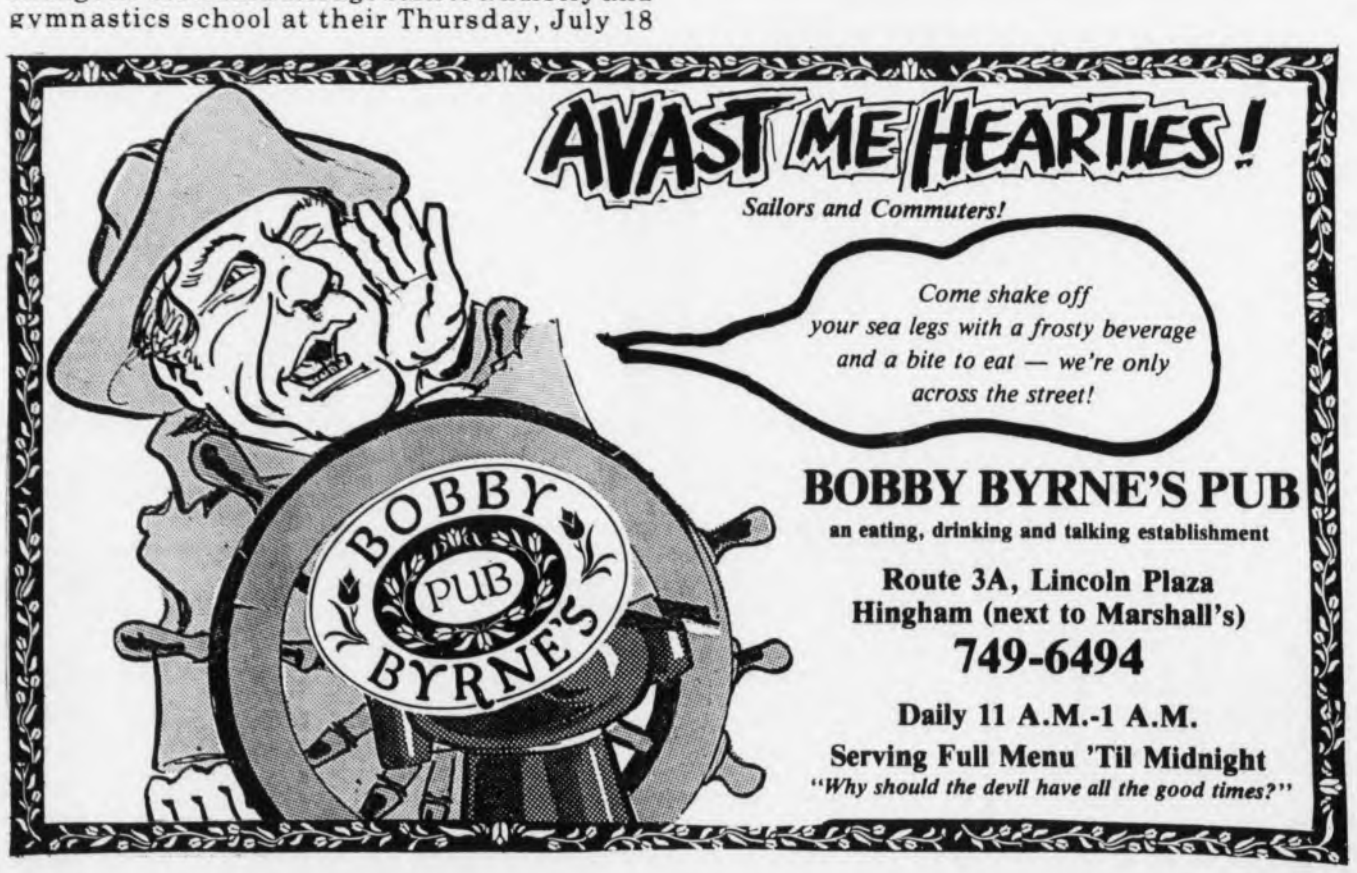
The Board listened to a request from the Community Center to restore an old barn, and change its use from a storage barn to a nursery and gymnastics school at their Thursday, July 18 meeting.

According to Community Center President Glenn Pratt, the request was made because the center needs more room and greater flexibility of facilities.

The Board took the matter under advisement. No discussion took place at the meeting.

The Board heard a request from Mr. Francis Collins of South Main St. to alter a pre-existing, non-conforming home. Collins plans to add a deck and dormer windows to the structure.

The Board took the matter under advisement.



Mr. Manuel Salvadore of Smith Place requested permission to amend an already approved plan to alter a pre-existing, non-conforming structure. The Board also took this matter under advisement.

A celebration of twenty-five years smooth sailing

By Lisa Shumaker

One day during the winter of 1960, Herb Towle was talking to Mr. and Mrs. Stanton about Cohasset's insufficient summer recreation for the children of this town.

In the midst of the conversation, all three agreed that Government Island would be the logical location for a summer recreation program in Cohasset.

Towle recalled that as a child growing up in Cohasset, it was common notion that if your parents didn't own a boat, you did not learn to sail. He had learned the skill by spending all his time at the Cohasset Yacht Club doing odd jobs and picking up bits and pieces of sailing knowledge on his own.

Towle decided that there should be a place where children could learn how to sail even if they didn't own a boat. And thus was born the idea for the Cohasset Sailing Club.

Towle brought his idea to a Cohasset lawyer named Roger Coulter. He developed a set of bylaws for the club (which still exist) along with a proposal which had to be approved by the town in order for the club to be built. Towle brought this proposal before Town Meeting held in March, 1960. He was granted permission to begin the club.

When asked if the idea for the Sailing Club was popular in the town, Towle replied, "Well, as of March, 1960, all we had was an idea. By June 17, we had $5700 with which we bought five ten-foot Sprites and hired a school teacher and two kids to teach."

During the first summer, 126 families applied for membership to the club; the Wakeman's volunteered the use of their Boston Whaler; and the clubhouse consisted of a little red brick building with a porch facing the water which Towle constructed so people wouldn't get wet when it rained.

The Sailing Club has come a long way since then.

Today, 116 children and 50 adults take lessons at the Sailing Club, and many more make frequent use of the facilities. Today, the club owns both a Whaler and a launch. In addition, the club has a huge clubhouse, a sailshed, and a gas shed. Incidentally, the original brick building now serves as the gas shed.

The club owns 10 Cape Cod Mercuries. Most of the lessons take place in these boats. The club also has several Lasers which are frequently used by free sailors. This summer, the club purchased three new Turnabouts. These boats will be used both for teaching and for team races against other clubs.

Lessons are held for children Monday through Friday from 8 a.m. until 4:30 p.m. rain or shine. There are several different categories of classes: Able Seaman, Mate, Skipper, and Sailing Master, with the Able Seaman the beginning class, and the Sailing Masters the most experienced.

Each class has certain requirements which must be mastered before the sailor can move to the next level.

The club also offers adult lessons on the weekends. Saturdays from 9 a.m. to noon, the Beginner class meets. This year, teacher Bob Jackson had a lot to contend with as 30 people joined this popular course. Sundays, an intermediate class runs from 9 a.m. to noon.

Sean Curran heads the teaching staff this summer along with his assistant Alan Cooke. The other instructors include Janet Carlson, Tim Curran, Aldan O'Connell, Sara Tague, and Lisa Shumaker.

For those who wish to sail for fun, free sailing is offered during the week from 4:30 to 8 p.m. and on the weekends from noon to 8 p.m.

When 12 year-old Ellen Schramm was asked why she liked the Sailing Club she remarked, "Because I get to sail with my friends."

Kristin Martin noted that one of the nice things about taking lessons at the club was that you didn't

'Wait Until Dark' doesn't measure up

By Judith Montminy

With so little activity in the Boston theatres this year, it was smart of Norwell's Nickerson Theatre to offer a special two-play summer season. The air-conditioned theatre provides a comfortable retreat from warm, humid nights.

The two plays, "Wait Until Dark" (opened July 9 and runs until July 28) and "The All Night Strut!" (Aug. 6-Aug. 25) are relatively easy-to-enjoy plays.

"Wait Until Dark" only asks its audience to suspend its disbelief and to accept some unlikely circumstances (i.e. a blind woman's unlocked doors in Greenwich Village).

"Strut!" requires its audience to sit back and bop to the rhythms of the '30's and 40's. Fran Charnas, who originally conceived, choreographed, and directed the show, will also direct the Nickerson Theatre production. The show offers great promise.

Unfortunately, the Nickerson's first summer production does not live up to expectations. Billed as a "tingling thriller," promising to "fray the nerves of theatregoers," "Wait Until Dark" suffers from directorial choices that just don't work. Director Judy Braha has given her actors too much leeway in a play that requires split-second timing and crisp characterizations.

The play takes place in Sam and Susy Hendrix's basement apartment in an old Greenwich Village house. Sam is a photographer, newly married to Susy, a woman blinded in an accident one year ago. Sam wants his wife to become the world's best blind person and forces her to help herself.

Example: Sam wants Susy to defrost the refrigerator while he is away on a business trip.

But Susy has to do it his way--she is not allowed to turn off the controls, she must disconnect the plug. The catch is that Sam won't show her where the plug is, she must find it herself.

In the first act, Paris Klopp plays Susy with a petulance and robotic cadence that does nothing to endear her to the audience. Her interactions with Al Mohrmann's Sam are more like a teenager and less a wife. Mohrmann adds little to the credibility of their relationship as well.

The complication in Frederick Knott's play is that Sam was given a child's doll by a strange woman in an airport. The woman came to the apartment looking for the doll, but Sam couldn't find it. Finding the doll becomes the focus of the entire play, involving characters who are veteran con artists and criminals.

Dan Von Bargen as Mike Talman and Jay Ginsberg as Sgt. Carlino are commendable as the two parolees who are drawn into the psychological games in "Wait Until Dark."

The pivotal character, though, is Harry Roat Jr., played by David Zoffoli. The man is a psychotic killer. Those of you who saw the 1967 film version starring Alan Arkin will remember Arkin's gifted transformations and unerring menace. Zoffoli doesn't come close. Too much emphasis is placed on effete posturings that undermine the building suspense and peril of the play.

The critical scene comes in Act II when a struggle between Susy and her attacker takes place in the dark. Miss Braha actually plunges her actors into real-life darkness--not the theatrical variety. This is not Living Theatre, nor is it cimema verite.

The audience can accept the suggestion of complete darkness without being forced to sit in a totally dark theatre with the sounds of actors groaning and bumping into each other during what appears (rather, what sounds!) like a poorly choreographed, uncontrolled fight scene. Groans in the dark on stage call for laughter from the audience. The spine tingling effect is lost.

At one point during the press night performance, young Jean Kelly, who plays the bratty child Gloria, bumped into a table. Apparently she was so surprised by her mistake that she broke her previously plausible characterization and started to laugh. Unforgiveable, even for a child actor.

Sloppy is probably the word that best describes the Nickerson's "Wait Until Dark." Control, menace, and audience manipulation are all missing.

FROM THE KITCHEN

by JOAN PINKHAM

The trick is, to get out of the kitchen as fast as one can on these fleeting summer days, while at the same time preventing malnutrition from setting in. That's where microwave cooks are way ahead of the rest of us. Potatoes bake in six or seven minutes, brownies are done in four and meat loaf in 17. Besides the added convenience of fast cooking, a microwave oven uses 25 percent less energy. It not only cooks food in short order, but also warms, melts and defrosts food. Here is Karen Orsak's recipe for a main dish that cooks for 20 minutes and is so quick to prepare that you'll be back outside before you know it.

CRANBERRY CHICKEN

1 (16 oz.) can whole berry cranberry sauce
1 (8 oz.) can pineapple tidbits, drained
2 tsp. butter or margarine
2 T. brown sugar
3 lb. frying chicken, cut up

Combine first four ingredients. Arrange chicken in 12x8x2" glass dish. Pour sauce over chicken and cook for 20 min., turning dish half-way after 10 min.

And ten minutes later, or while you're enjoying your chicken, this dessert can be cooking, called:

EASY APPLE PIE

1/2 C. butter or oleo
1/4 C. sugar
2 C. graham cracker crumbs
5 C. sliced, peeled apples
1/2 C. brown sugar
2 tsp. cinnamon

Place butter in large glass mixing bowl. Melt in microwave (1/2 min.). Add sugar and crumbs. Mix well and press half of mixture into 9" glass pie plate. Add sliced apples and sprinkle with sugar and cinnamon. Dot with butter. Cover with rest of crumb mixture. Press down. Cook in microwave for 10 min., turning plate half-way after 5 min. Serve warm with ice cream.

A little chopping, a little dressing and presto — a salad. No pots bubbling and steaming up the kitchen — no turning up of noses at the smell of cabbage cooking, just a crunchy, healthful salad that Joanne Lawrence says is great. She writes: "Can't give amounts — it's all to your own taste, but it's delicious!" Named after the friend who gave her the recipe, Joanne calls it:

LEE'S COLESLAW

Shredded cabbage
Chopped apples
Raisins and cashew nuts
Dressing: Mayonnaise, dry mustard, dill pickle juice, salt and pepper.

Tidying up my desk the other rainy day paid off, for I unearthed a long-lost cookbook that was printed in 1970 by the Evening Division of the Marshfield Woman's Club. It has some nifty, tried and true recipes, among them these that are quick to prepare for unexpected company. Beverly Johnson's goes like this:

FIVE CAN CASSEROLE

One can each of tuna, chicken noodle soup, cream of mushroom soup, evaporated milk (small size) and dry chinese noodles. Mix and heat in covered casserole at 350 for 45 min. Then add bread crumbs or cheese on top and place under broiler for a few minutes.

Mary Jo Loveridge, another clubwoman, contributed this recipe:

OVEN STEW

2 1/2 lb. stew beef
1/3 C. minute tapioca
1 medium size can each of tomatoes and peas
1 small can boiled onions
Potatoes, carrots, salt and pepper

Put tomatoes, tapioca and seasonings in large covered casserole; add meat (cut in 1" cubes), carrots, potatoes and juice from onions. Bake at 300 at least three hours, adding cans of onions and peas drained, the last half hour.

Club member June Phinney wrote, this helpful note for the book: "When having a crowd, use giant aluminum baking sheets (11 1/2 x 16 1/2 x 1 1/2") for giant-size party cake, oven-fried drumsticks, baked 'burgers, baked pork chops, barbecued spareribs and baked veggies and fruits. Just throw away the sheet after using."

PATCHES — by Lois Martin

Bathing beauty breaks down . . . again

It's about our bodies.

For the record I saw yours on the beach and you looked fine. I say that because I know you were wondering how you looked. I sensed that you were self-conscious about the fit of your suit. I thought you'd feel better and relax more if someone told you privately. You're great.

This is an ode to our annual insecurity. We've been putting our bodies out there again in bathing suits and sun dresses, shorts, even. We've been trying to pretend it doesn't matter, that we look okay, that older is better, that softer is sensational.

PATCHES

Not one of us believes it. Oh, it isn't that we find fault with other bodies. It's only our own.

I have sat on the beach, lurking behind my sunglasses, studying the assortment of body parts, alignments, creations the Lord hath wrought. There isn't a year that goes by without my giving thanks that people go to the beach, regardless. Well, we should go beyond foolish self-consciousness that would keep us from having sun and fun. Life is nothing without a frolic here and there.

Too long have we paid the price, some of us more than others, for Eve's having lodged her teeth into the apple. High time we grew up about the naked body, or the relatively naked one. He or she is not a better person draped in a floor length wool coat year round.

Modesty ought to be borne of self-respect, not shame.

We must kick the locker room mentality of pointing and giggling about personal body parts. Let's grow up, be mature, accept the human body, all of it, as naturally as we have accepted toes and ear lobes.

. . . All cackle and no eggs, here. I have accepted everyone's body in this town, except mine. Mine and mine alone is funny looking. I can't vouch for all equipment that came on yours, though I've got a hunch. But I've acted as if I'd been issued different goods, freakish stuff that never showed up on the doctor's office chart.

I exhibit my body only on a need to know basis. I'm probably the only one who asks for two johnnies before the annual physical exam, one that'll close in front and one for the back. Would that once this summer I'd treat my body like I view yours.

You look great. Don't give it a thought. Why on earth would you feel a whit embarrassed.

Not once have I found your stretch marks, your paunch, your sagging sloping portions. Never have I snickered at your waffled inner/upper thighs. I'm not sure you have them. And your bathing suit is goodlooking.

In my mind, I'm the only one who came out of the delivery room with battle scars. Only I, according to my perspective, walk across the Julian Street bridge causing little slapping noises of flesh.

That for which I have found no fault in you, I have multiplied in my own body.

They say there's a cure. A nude beach. A couple days of that, they say, and I'd be free of self-recriminations. I need to find a beach where no body pays attention to some body's else. I could creep up the dunes, edging along on my stomach until I gain confidence. I, of course, will be wearing glasses so no body sees my eyes scanning the horizon. With concentrated restraint I can keep the expression of awe off my face. Within a couple days of this raw encounter, I'll be more accepting of my self. I'll develop a laissez faire attitude about this body.

What a relief that would be for my bathing suit. No article of clothing, no garment in the world has had such a burden as my suit. It has been asked to cover everything and further to shape everything it covers so that the end (especially) result will be as unobtrusive as possible.

Ultimately I can go on a regular beach nonchalantly, without distributing mimeographed explanations about my body.

I'm not ready for that yet. First Truro. Meanwhile, I hate to skip the sunshine or the season. See you on the beach. I'm the one in last year's blanket.

ANGLER'S CORNER — by George Doucette

Fins, masks, snorkels can mean bigger fish

Many times a fisherman will sit on shore or in a boat and wish for x-ray vision. If you only had the ability to see where the big fish are hiding when the summer heat makes it hard to find the big fish. Well, maybe I can solve some of your problems.

When fishing fresh water ponds, a good friend of mine, Fred Alger, uses an unusual method to find the big fish. Fins, mask and snorkel. (that's right!) To find concentrations of bass or trout, and other gamefish, Fred snorkels around the lake during the bright, sunny part of a day marking the areas where he sees large fish or concentrations of fish.

Chances are, they will not move far from that area as warm water has kept them in smaller, tighter areas of a pond where oxygen, cover, Ph, springs, food or any number of factors afford them comfort. Now you must go back to those areas later in the evening or early the next day with rod and reel to catch them. Fish these spots with lures and bait at these times and you will find them in a feeding mood.

This may seem like a lot of trouble at first, then think about all those lakes and ponds on summer campgrounds you know nothing about. This method is a quick and easy way to checkout drop offs, bottom structure, depth, and cover.

Most of these lakes or ponds are clear and not too deep, so you can cover an average campground in two or three hours. You are usually on the lake swimming with the kids anyway and this is a great way to teach kids how to fish live underwater as well.

Fred has seen that in most lakes, 90 percent of the larger fish are in a few condensed areas, in small ponds this is even truer. In one pond in Myles Standish State Forest, he has seen 7 lb. largemouths and 4 lb. smallmouths within feet of each other resting in the comfort zone, and I know that large trout will seek the same areas for the same reasons I have mentioned. Still think it's a waste?

A snorkel outfit costs about $25 (complete) for a good one, which is about what you spend on gas to get you and family to your special pond at camp "watchamacallit."

So pack you fishing rods on the next family camping trip, throw the canoe on top of the car, stow your diving gear and you just might catch the biggest fish of your life on a summer camping trip with the wife and kids.

Politicus — by David A. Mittell, Jr.

Sudden death in the subway

June 30 was hot and I was in a hurry. While waiting in line for service at Kimball's I had calculated that I would have to make the subway by one o'clock to get to my office in time to receive an important call from an important friend.

A lunchtime crowd on Washington Street kept me from breaking into a run, but I was walking fast—agitated— and I walked faster as I got nearer to State Street Station. I took the steps down into the subway in twos and threes. When I got into the station I looked around quickly and found a clock over the collection booth: two minutes to one. "Good," I thought as I stopped and breathed. "Made it!"

I put in my fare and walked through the turnstile to the platform. I leaned over the pit and looked into the tunnel. No train approaching. Then I looked the other way. All signal lights green. I breathed again. "Excellent! Didn't just miss one."

For the first time I noticed I was sweating and it made me self-conscious. As the most recent arrival on the platform, I felt I was the only one who was discombobulated, whose body had movement. Other people had found their spot and manner for waiting, and except for the pulling on a handbag or the turning of a page, they were completely still. It overwhelmingly seemed that their only features were eyes and cheekbones. Their eyes followed every move I made while their cheekbones stayed fixed in another direction.

I tried to squelch my moving around, and waited for the cooler air of the subway to do its work on the beads of sweat on my face. I took another look in the direction the train would be coming from, hoping to feel the wind of the approaching train on my face. I felt nothing. I licked my index finger and held it toward the silent tunnel for a more sensitive reading of the air. Still no wind, and nothing to sense but the smell of subway tunnel, a smell that must be produced by some micro-organism that thrives only in subway tunnels. It is a smell that takes me instantaneously back to a happy summer in London and a nervous fort-night in Moscow.

As I looked toward Haymarket Station hoping for some air, a solitary lightbulb deep in the tunnel found my eye. This light, which seems at a distance to be about fifteen watts, is peculiar to the Boston subway, and surely its inventor was some official Boston supernumerary who took his reasons to the grave.

Deep in the tunnel as far as the eye can see, this tiny light burns continuously until a train has left the nearest station. Then it silently goes out, thus warning the occasional Bostonian of many years' standing on such platforms that a train is approaching.

The burning bulb told me no train was near. I stared at it intently, as if to force it out. Finally I turned away and exhaled impatiently. Soon the phone would be ringing, and I wouldn't be there to answer.

Then something incongruous happened—the kind of event that is both pleasing and threatening to anonymous souls who wait on subway platforms for trains to come. Pleasing because they are bored. Threatening because they are scared.

Two men in civilian clothes came along, climbed into the pit near where the train enters the station, and walked down the tracks to the opposite end. In response to this inexplicable human event, whole faces made contact for the first time, as if to say, "What do you make of that?" People looked as though they had seen a live centaur clop by, for such is the force of the sense of danger about the pit that one almost believes it takes mythical power to enter.

When the two men reached the end of the station they stopped, turned around, bent over, and began picking up pieces of paper. I watched as they worked their way past me along the tracks. What struck me was their casualness. One accidental brush against the third rail could be electrocution. But they stepped over the rail, reached under it, all the while picking up papers that had been dropped into the pit by the mindless multitude. They worked with the stunning nonchalance that men who do dangerous jobs often seem to have.

I felt like screaming at them, "Be careful, you stupid bastards!" They went about their picking, as mindless of the agony they were causing me as they seemed to be of the 6,000 volts in the third rail. At length one of the men climbed out of the pit while the other picked his way out of sight and into the tunnel toward Haymarket Station. I breathed again.

Suddenly there was a gust of air and a roar, and a second later the face of a train came around the bend from Haymarket. The rattle of the trains is unfriendly, and the high-pitched squeal of metal on metal is hideous. But since these are the sounds that mean hearth and home, the ear soon learns to regard them fondly. I thought, "I still might make it in time," and I stepped forward to the edge of the platform, trying to guess exactly where when the train would stop, a door would be.

Then for the second time something incongruous happened. Just as the train entered the station the motorman braked, and the train stopped. One car was in the station, the other three still in the tunnel. For the second time whole faces made contact with each other, knowing contact this time, as if to say, "Situation normal . . . all fouled up!"

The motorman got out of his cab and climbed down the front of the train onto the tracks. He went around to the side of the train and started walking into the tunnel toward the rear of the train, the third rail at every step. Twice he kneeled over and looked under the train.

Finally he climbed out of the pit and spoke to the man who had been picking up papers who had gotten out of the pit. That man got back into the pit and disappeared behind the train. The motorman walked over to the collector's booth and made a phone call. When he had finished, he came out and quietly announced: "It'll be a few minutes, folks, so just relax."

Someone asked what happened. The motorman did not answer. He remained in front of the collection booth, saying nothing, and when the curiosity of the crowd turned from him to the train, I went over to him and asked, "What happened?"

"There's a guy under there."

"Is he dead?"

He nodded and mouthed the word "yes" but didn't voice it. Then he said, "Cool it, O.K.?"

I said, "O.K." I felt myself breathe in and out. I looked at the train. It looked like any other Orange Line train. It had given no sign, made no special sound in crushing a man to death.

I had learned enough. Violence fascinates, but only the idea of it. The reality revulses. I turned and walked out of the station. As I passed the collector's booth I noticed the clock for the second time. Seven after 1:00. I had been in the station for nine minutes.

When I reached the street, the air was hot once again, but fresh and full of voices and human movement. Girls with packages from Filene's and Jordan's, businessmen with seersucker suits and straw hats. I passed an old vendor of newspapers and several young vendors of handicraft. Two policemen ran by me and entered the station. I knew why. A few more paces and I heard a siren. I knew what for. Everyone else on Washington Street went about his business, and in what I knew I was alone.

I decided to walk up to Park Street and take an Arborway car rather than wait for the Orange Line to get back in service. As I walked along Bromfield Street I thought, "Somewhere in this great metropolis right now there is a woman going about her housework, perhaps beginning to think about dinner, and she doesn't know her husband is dead. I know it and she doesn't. That doesn't seem right. In a few minutes she is going to get a phone call, and she and her children will never be the same again."

I got on an Arborway car at Park Street. The heat was on, as the heat always is on in Arborway cars on very hot days. At Copley Square the car broke down and we had to wait for a second car to come along and push our car. Once again there were knowing looks. I was glad for the delay. I needed to think, and the lilting of the car had been distracting me.

When we came out the tunnel at Northeastern there was another delay. A starter boarded the car and told everyone to get off the car that was being pushed and get into the car that was doing the pushing.

There were more knowing looks among the redundantly delayed, and this time I was irritated myself. I thought of the woman in megalopolis. She had lost the man she loved, and I had missed a phone call from a woman I loved. I realized that inevitably my loss was starting to matter more to me than hers.

The next morning the Globe carried the following item:

"William McConnell, 34, of Malden, an M.B.T.A. trackwalker, was killed yesterday around 1:00 p.m. when he was struck by a southbound Orange Line train near State Street Station. Service on the Orange Line was halted 37 minutes while McConnell, a four year M.B.T.A. employee, was extricated. He was pronounced dead at the scene.

"McConnell is survived by his wife Alice (Brown) Mc Connell of Malden, his father Joseph of Everett, and two children at home."

MUSINGS — By John H. Cutler

☐ The Duxbury Planning Board is doing all it can to keep newcomers from finding land on their property.

☐ One convincing form of flattery is immigration.

☐ Are you interested in Russian proverbs? Here are a few:

Keep feet in mud, and not in stars.

Wag your tongue as much as you please, but don't wave your gun.

Don't drive your horse with a whip - use the oat bag.

Be friends with the wolf, but keep one hand on your axe.

You'll never get a hangover from other people's vodka.

Better the first quarrel than the last.

Pray to God but keep rowing to the shore.

☐ Here is another proverb that I like:
"In the morning of life, work; in the midday, give counsel; in the evening, pray."

☐ I didn't say he was a failure. I merely said that he hit bottom, then fell off. This reminds me of what a home ec teacher said when they were cutting the budget because of Prop 2 1/2. If you think you're at the bottom, remember we are at the bottom trying to dig our way up.

☐ Society exists only because some people are willing to work and others are willing to let them. William Feather had another idea: if people really liked to work, we'd still be plowing the land with sticks and transporting goods on our backs.

☐ I didn't say she had a flappable jaw. I merely said she could keep a secret only until she had someone to tell it to.

☐ Do you know what an oxymoron is? Examples: soaring decline, widening narrowness, concealing candor. In brief, an oxymoron is a phrase in which one word contradicts another.

☐ A Belvedere, CA, ordinance was written: "No dog shall be in public without its master on a leash." The law of St. Joseph, MO, forbids firemen to cavort about in the undershirts.

☐ Clothes for women are a heavy form of artillery. The kind she wears should depend on her height, her width and whether she is built like a model, silo or capital S.

☐ Pravda in English means truth, but in Russian means anything but the truth.

☐ I can't stand husbands who refer "to the wife."

☐ In the lingo of bureaucracy, a tax increase is a revenue enhancement; a pothole, a pavement deficiency; an earthquake, a seismic event.

☐ One night I dreamt I was a French poodle, when I woke in the morning, I wasn't sure whether I was a man who dreamt he was a poodle, or a poodle dreaming he was a man.

THE NO-COMPROMISE SOLUTION TO BUYING AN AUTOMOBILE.

When you lay out a substantial amount of money for an automobile, you should get what you want. Buying a car shouldn't be an exercise in making sacrifices.

Saab doesn't ask you to give up anything.

Superb handling and performance have made the Saab 900 one of Europe's most respected sports sedans. But that performance is delivered in return for little gas* and less fuss by a reliable two-liter engine. And unlike many other high-performance cars, the Saab is perfectly at home in the workaday world. Four adults can travel comfortably all day in a Saab, or the rear two seats can be folded flat to add extra space for cargo.

We'll be happy to tell you about a lot of other features that you won't have to give up when you buy a Saab.

SAAB
The most intelligent car ever built.

*Saab 900, 5 speed. EPA estimated highway mpg. Use estimated mpg for comparisons only. Mileage varies with speed, trip length and weather. Actual highway mileage will probably be less.

Sophie Redfield said she liked the fact that you don't have to own a boat to become a member of the club. Sophie added that she had learned a lot about racing, which she enjoys a lot. She also likes being able to take the boats out on her own.

Twenty-five years ago the Cohasset Sailing Club celebrated its birth.

Today, the club may look much different. But the overall purpose remains: to give all kids (and adults), whether or not they own a boat, the opportunity to learn to sail.

VERC NEWS-CHRONICLE
and Exxon Gazette
VOLUME I NUMBER I • JULY, 1985 "A VERC FAMILY PUBLICATION" DUXBURY, MASSACHUSETTS 02332

VERC strives for total automotive service...

A Story of Family Pride and Growth

When Eugene Vercollone purchased the Marshfield Car Wash 12 years ago and went into business with his son Paul, little did he dream of the expansion that would follow. A family business in the truest sense, the VERC family of businesses encompasses the car wash, a service station, an auto parts store and a body shop, automobile leasing and car and truck rentals. The growth, assisted by the addition of two more sons, has been steady and financially sound backed up by an experienced and capable support staff.

After the success of the car wash, the Vercollone family purchased the Duxbury Exxon Station in Hall's Corner, Duxbury in 1977. Son Leo entered the business and managed the business. In 1980 the family acquired the old Cushing Dodge Building where Duxbury Auto Body and Duxbury Auto Parts was established. During that same year extensive renovations began which now represents a vast improvement on the character of Hall's Corner.

In 1982 son Jack entered the family picture rounding out the scene. Jack established and developed the rental phase of the business. The original fleet consisted of 25 vehicles at that time. The figure now stands at over 80, thrice the original number.

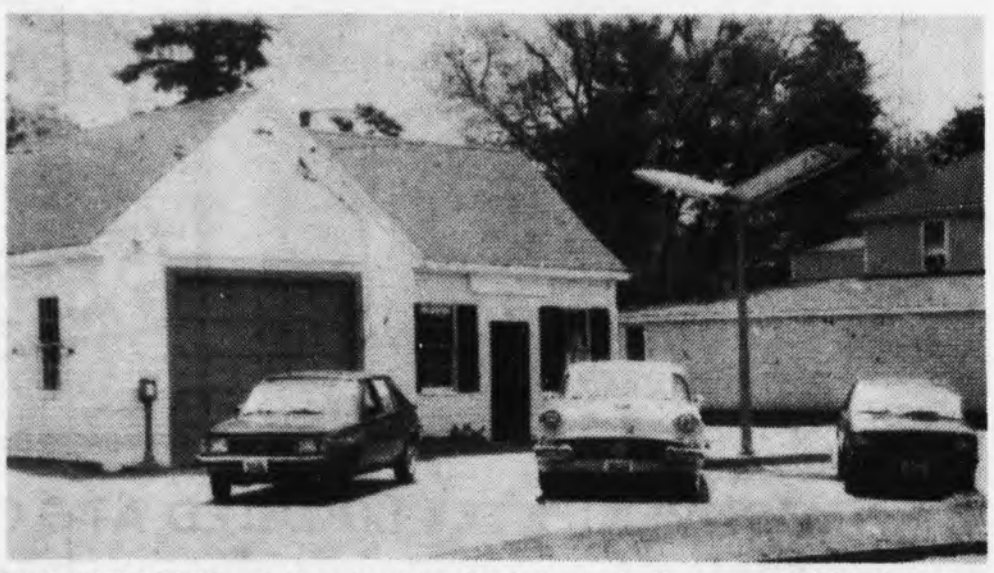
Later in 1982 the Kingston Exxon joined the VERC businesses. The first quarter of 1984 again saw mobility when leasing was offered to VERC patrons. Most recently a site at 46 Country Way, Scituate was acquired in order to extend rental and leasing capacity further north along Route 3A.

Within the last month the Vercollone family has purchased a 10 acre land parcel in the Kingston South Industrial Park for the future corporate headquarters of the VERC automotive center. The land, off the Smith's Lane exit will have excellent visibility with 700 feet of Route 3 frontage. Construction is scheduled for some time next year.

The growth of the VERC enterprises within the automotive field has catapulted them into a leadership role on the South Shore. Their horizontal growth has made VERC a familiar name within the full service of automotive needs providing every aspect of service to drivers. Individuals and the business community can have their vehicles, gassed, serviced, repaired, washed and painted. Indeed, the vehicle itself could carry the VERC seal of ownership.

The Kingston location will provide the space and resources to further service the South Shore with a comprehensive vehicle service plan. The VERC logo was specifically selected in order to place the Vercollone family name before the public. Although father Gene is now semi-retired, sons Paul, Leo and Jack carry on the family tradition. Living in Duxbury, Marshfield and Pembroke, the brothers are highly visible within the business and take pride in backing up the committment of excellence established 12 years ago.

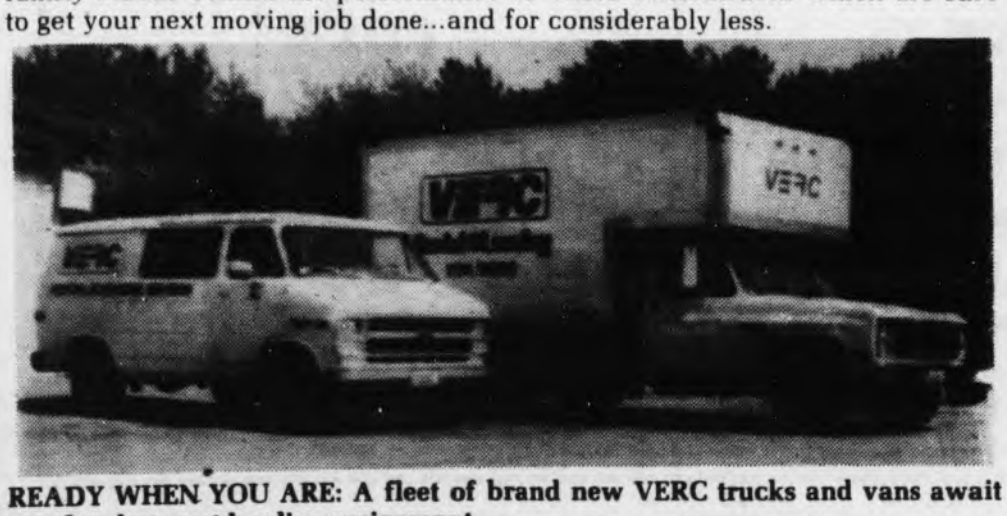
A MEETING OF THE MINDS: The Vercollone brothers (L-R) Paul, Leo and Jack, discuss business at their Hall's Corner location.



CERTAINLY CENTRALLY LOCATED: The old Cushing Dodge Building never looked better. The renovated location in Hall's Corner is the current hub of the VERC family of automotive businesses.

New Brushes in Marshfield New Location in Scituate

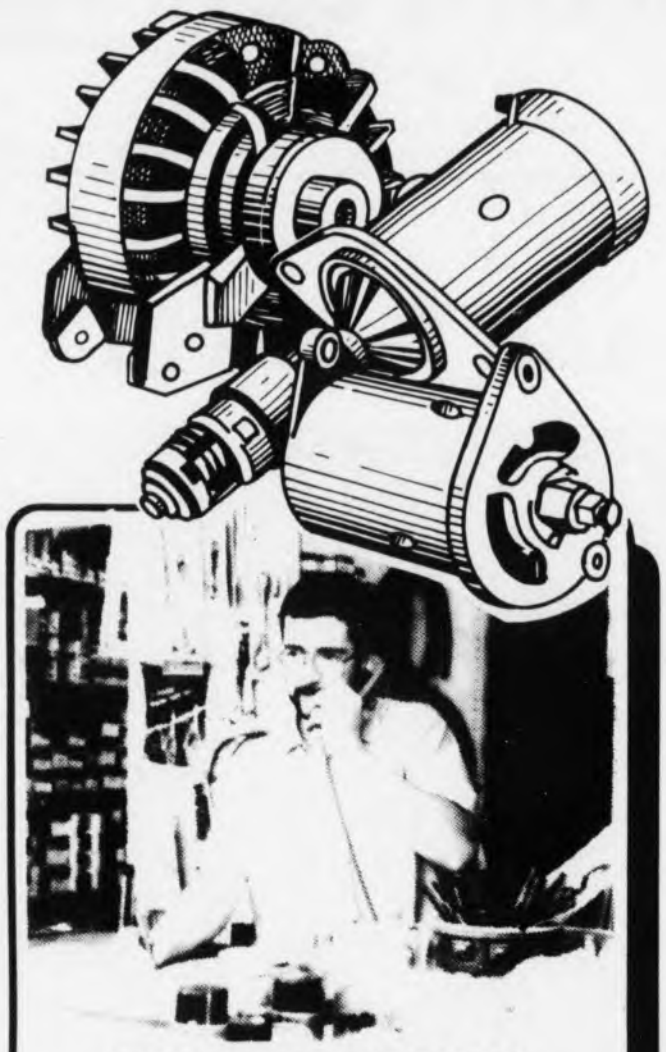
The Marshfield Car Wash announces its all new soft cloth wash, an innovation in the field. The new technique buffs and shines paint as the gentle fabric washes your car. Your vehicle will love you and you'll love the treatment of a full service car wash...one of the few left in the South Shore. For those who prefer, there are self service bays. Simonizing and reconditioning is also available at highly competitive rates. Come on down and see for yourself why the Marshfield Car Wash is the choice of so many. We'll give you four good reasons, see page 6.



Another form of new for the VERC family is the acquisition of a property at 46 Country Way in Scituate which now offers rental opportunities for South Shore residents living further north along Routes 3 and 3-A. Conveniently located, the site brings VERC convenience to a new service area. Leasing services will also be available from the Scituate location in the near future.

NEW LOCATION: 46 Country Way in Scituate is the newest VERC location, moving their service area further north along Route 3-A.

VERC-Owned Fleet = Savings



The acquisition of 10 new VERC-owned trucks now means the public can rent direct from VERC Rentals. The new, well maintained and reliable vehicles are backed by the integrity of local ownership. The new fleet consists of vans and trucks large enough to move your entire household. VERC trucks mean lower overhead and family servicing of trucks on the premises. This converts to dollar savings which are passed on to the public. The Vercollone family stands behind the performance of VERC ownedtrucks which are sure to get your next moving job done...and for considerably less.

READY WHEN YOU ARE: A fleet of brand new VERC trucks and vans await you for that next hauling assignment.

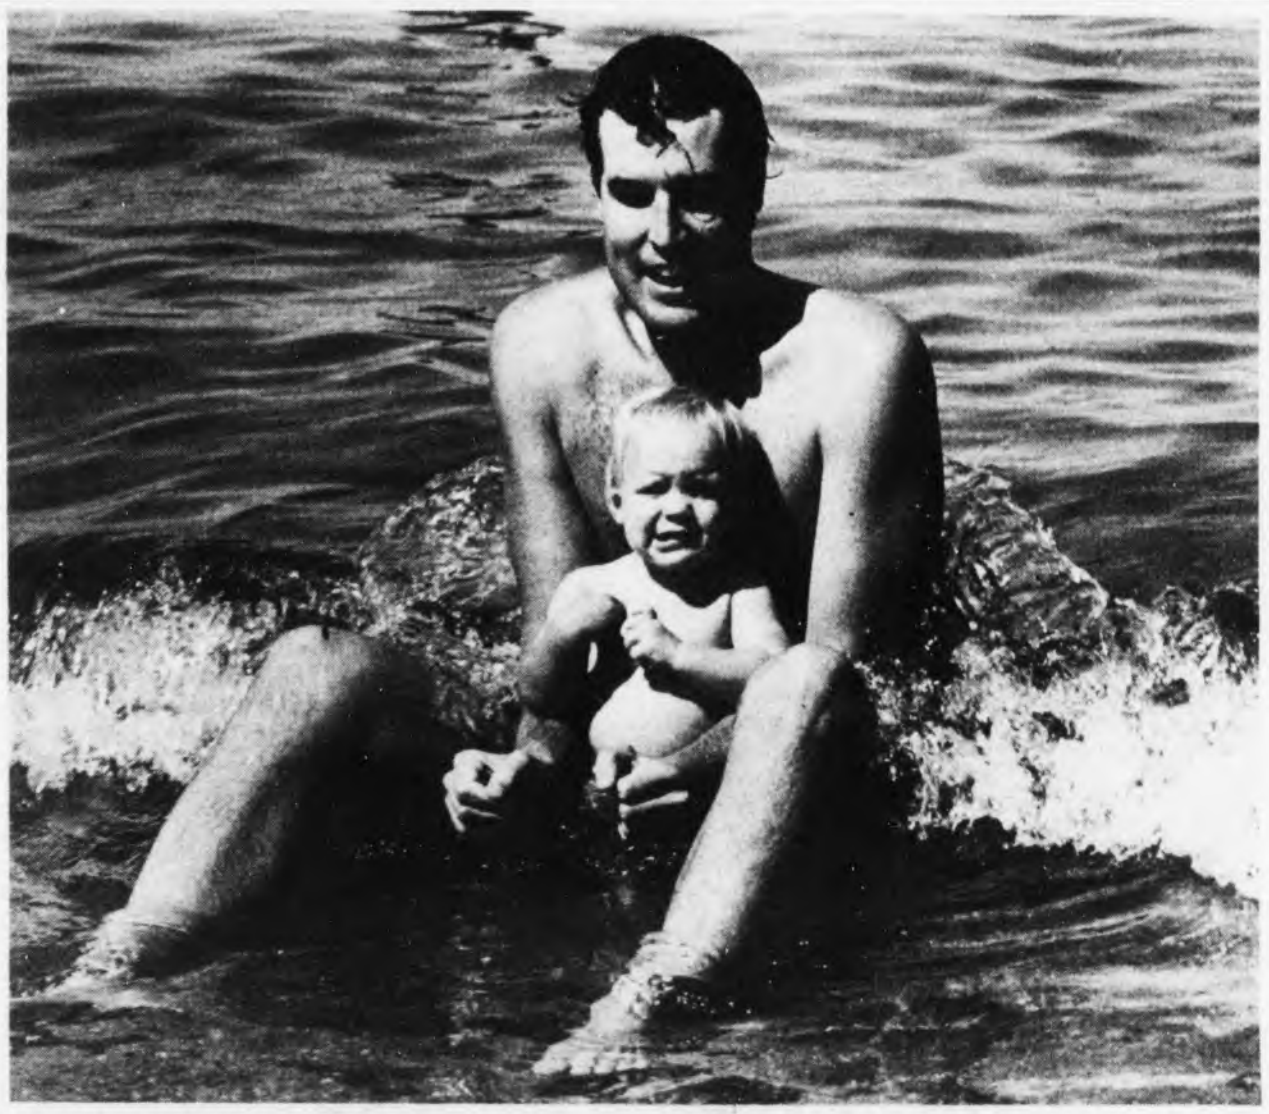
Town will study land easements

Regardless of whether the planning board approved the subdivision known as Lily Pond Estates, the town will continue its efforts to determine the true ownership of that entire 36-acre parcel.

The water commission was informed Tuesday afternoon by Town Counsel Richard Henderson that the planning board's approval or rejection of the plan in no way interferes with the town's obligation to determine the title holder of that parcel and its rights-of-way and easements. Therefore, according to Commission Chairman Peter Pratt, the town will retain a special counsel who will investigate the land matter and report back within six to eight weeks.

The special counsel was expected to be named Wednesday night, based on the recommendation of Atty. Henderson.



Commission Chairman Pratt said Tuesday he was "completely satisfied" with Henderson's ruling, which separates the issue into two distinct matters.

Firstly, the planning board has the authority and responsibilty to rule on the site plan brought before them by developers Aaron Rosenberg and Edward Britt.

Last week, the developers denied the board a six-week extension while special town counsel investigates property deeds and title. They ordered the board to issue a ruling on the site plan within its statutory timeframe of July 31.

Secondly, Atty. Henderson stated to the water commission this week that the town has a separate responsibility to legally determine who owns the entire parcel, including the rights-of-way and easements that have been the center of controversy and question for several weeks.

State and town still puzzled by pollution source

The harbor area inside the breakwater to Bassings Beach has been closed to shellfishing for more than a year. And until a definitive source of the pollution is undercovered, that situation will continue.

The state Department of Environmental Quality Engineering (DEQE) along with the town's health and sewer departments have been monitoring the pollution levels of the harbor. And although one source was discovered and corrected, the prohibition of all shellfishing within the breakwater will continue as long as the bacterial counts remain above the state's standards.

According to Tena Davies of DEQE, the pollution within the breakwater of Cohasset Harbor is not great, but higher than the state's allowable limits. The most recent test completed July 10 indicated a total coliform count of 93 which is significantly higher than the standard of 69. The fecal coliform count was 15 which is not much greater than the state's allowable limit of 14.

Health Agent Joseph Godzik was optimistic of a breakthrough in the 13-month-old shellfishing ban when a leak from a Howard Gleason Road septic system was detected last year.

The situation was corrected, but much to Dr. Godzik's dismay, the pollution levels were reduced by an insignificant amount.

It is his feeling that the source of the pollution is scattered and varied, and a viable reduction in the bacterial count will not be immediately forthcoming.

"It very possibly could go on indefinitely," he said this week. "I really thought the Howard Gleason road system would be a major contributing factor and its correction would result in a significant drop in the levels, but it didn't.

"It's hard to tell just what the sources of the pollution are," he continued. "Some is probably from animals defecating along the shore. Perhaps the sewer treatment plant contributes to the cause, or a boater may dump his tank in the harbor. A couple of sources here and there can add up. There's not much you can do about some of these things."

Davies noted that Cohasset is on the DEQE's priority resurvey list and the state will be investigating the pollution sources in more detail "by the end of this year." She said the state could not predict a date when more detailed tests of the harbor will be conducted.

The ban inside the harbor breakwaters was enacted in June, 1984 after the town and state detected high bacterial and fecal coliform counts. It has been in effect since that initial ban.

The interior of the harbor has been closed to all shellfishing since 1950, because of the pollution problems caused by the treatment plant, according to Davies. The breakwaters ban, which extends to Bassings Beach has been in effect for 13 months.

Health Agent Godzik said he is happy to cooperate with the state in testing the water. He conducts a water sample test every couple of weeks, adding that although the water still does not meet state standards, but is not extremely high.

Dr. Godzik also noted that although the water is unsafe for the harvesting of shellfish, there is no other ban imposed in the area, including swimming.

"We are continually sampling the water to see what turns up. It's hard to tell what is causing this problem. It maybe a certain amount of runoff from nearby septic systems . A couple here and there really tends to add up. It's not a high level of pollution and its probably caused by many sources. It's going to be difficult to narrow down the cause," he added.

SewerTreatment Plant Supervisor Manuel Salvador said he has been conducting tests in that area for the past year. He completes the tests in several areas from the Yacht club to Whitehead Beach. The sources, he said in concurrence with Dr. Godzik, are many and difficult to specify.

"One pipe was found to be leaking from Howard Gleason Road and that was repaired. All I do is the tests and I report the results. From what I can see, the state has done nothing to solve the problem," he said.

Demolition permit awaits appeal

Building Inspector Edward Poskus will not issue a permit to demolish the partially-constructed second floor at 51 Jerusalem Road until he hears from the developers' attorney.

The town's inspector said Distinctive Homes Trust has 20 days in which Attorney Walter Sullivan of Scituate may appeal the Zoning Board of Appeal's decision to rescind a building permit issued in April. In addition, the board denied the developer's application for a special permit to construct a second story at the location.

The zoning board made its determination July 25. At that time the members decided that the house, which is too close to lot lines, was being made more non-conforming by adding a second story which extended over the first floor. The previous one-level, flat-roofed structure was a non-conforming use of the property.

Neighbors had complained that the second story was blinding their view of the harbor salt marshes, and that additional parking caused by the increased living space would present a traffic hazard in the residential neighborhood.

Attorney John Roy, hired by several neighbors including Mr. and Mrs. Donald O'Neil, Mr. and Mrs. John Guiggio, Mr. and Mrs. Daniel Prisble, Mr. and Mrs. Richard Colburn, and Mr. and Mrs. Bernard O'Brien, continually argued that the development necessitated a special permit. He appealed the building inspector's decision to the zoning board.

The home at 51 Jerusalem Road was recently sold to two developers, Julie Gailinas and Andrea Merrill. Construction crews had nearly gutted the interior of the home which had been purchased for $206,000.

All construction was stopped by order of the building inspector until the zoning board issued its decision.

Cohasset's week . . .

Company seeks relief

The owners of Target Industries will go to court after the Zoning Board of Appeals denied an application to make contact lenses at their Pleasant Street location.

The business owners requested a variance to change the use of a former beauty shop on Pleasant Street. They intend to fabricate contact lenses in the building which is attached to their current location.

The board denied the request, stating that zoning law forbids the manufacture of optical goods in the downtown area. The only location where that would be allowed is along the light industrial area of Route 3A, according to the board.

Owners Roger Porter and Michael Abbruzzese stated they would seek relief from the decision in court. They argued that the new process would not include the manufacture of the lenses, but the fabrication of the plastic material. They also noted it was a logical extension of the permitted use within their current location.

Store progress

J. Bildner and Sons, the shop which is proposing to locate within Cushing Plaza, has delayed its opening date to sometime this fall.

The gourmet food store will probably open sometime around October 15. Delays in the arrival of certain building equipment and unexpected delays in construction work has forced the opening date back from an original target of late summer.

According to a company spokesman, a great deal of demolition and construction work is being completed at the site. All necessary town permits are being applied for by the company's attorneys, he added.

Chairman wanted

The Board of Selectmen is seeking someone to chair the committee to oversee an exchange between Cohasset and Souppes-Sur-Loing.

Our sister town in France communicated with us a few weeks ago. In the correspondence, the mayor of that town explained a committee had been formed to promote and arrange an exchange of residents and students between the two communities.

Selectman Cliff Mitman, who is attempting to form a similar committee here, said last week that a few residents have volunteered to participate in an exchange committee. He requested that anyone interested in leading that group, contact him for information.

The citizens of Souppes-Sur-Loing did not indicate when they would like to begin the exchange, but they indicated that plans are being developed. Mitman is anxious for Cohasset's committee to decide whether we will be sending residents over there, in addition to accepting the visitors here.

Anyone wishing further information, may contact Mitman at 383-9766.

Golf course to pump

The Cohasset Country Club received its final approval last week to pump flooded water on the seventh and eighth fairways.

Despite the continual objection of neighbors of the club, the Zoning Board of Appeals granted approval to construct a concrete weir and a 5000-gallon-per-minute pumping system. A special permit was necessary because the fairways are located within the floodplain and watershed areas.

The conservation commission, planning board and drainage advisory committee have reviewed and approved the plan with several conditions attached. The Department of Environmental Quality Engineering has also enumerated several conditions which must be met in order to pump at the country club location.

The zoning board noted in its deliberations that pumping must only take place between 8 a.m. and 6 p.m. on weekdays and not earlier than 11 a.m. on weekends. The conservation commission earlier stated that water can not be pumped until it has fallen to a certain level.

Three members of the board, who are members of the country club, did not participate in the hearing.

(Carol McCann)

Red Tide lifted

The ban prohibiting the harvesting of all soft-shelled shellfish along Cohasset's shores has been lifted.

Based on bacterial tests conducted last week, the state Department of Environmental Quality Engineering (DEQE) notified the town that the ban no longer applied.

ZBA orders second story razed

When the roof was torn off and a second story framed upon the structure, neighbors complained that it obstructed their view of Little Harbor

Their attorney also argued that a third bedroom was being added to the structure, which would affect the home's septic system capacity. Health Agent Joseph Godzik disputed that claim and said the room in question could not be labeled an additional bedroom. He had previously issued the necessary permit to begin alterations to the home.

For months, Atty. Roy contended that the extensive renovations to the home required a special permit according to state building codes. He argued before the zoning board last month that because the home lacked adequate frontage or a sideyard, any renovation required a special permit. He also noted that the Conservation Commission should be concerned with the issue since the building is located within 100 feet of the floodplain.

When Atty. Roy applied for the zoning hearing, he also requested that the building inspector halt further construction on the building. Work was stopped at the site in late May.

The abutters' co-counsel, Randee Cassel, had also argued that the building permit was issued and work began at the site April 19, despite Atty. Roy's notification to the developers and building inspector that neighbors had serious concerns about the proposed renovations.

The zoning board in its decision noted that the builders had proceeded with construction during the 30-day appeal period after the permit was issued, despite their knowledge of strong opposition to the project.

The board also objected to the inadequate parking area at the property and the dangerous condition caused by cars backing onto Jerusalem Road.

In his argument to the zoning board in June, Atty. Roy had stated, "This alteration is far and in excess of the legal limits of what one can do to an existing structure. Every square inch has been gutted. It is clearly new construction."

Twenty nine residents lose shipyard jobs

By Tom Henshaw

The Fore River Shipyard, once the flagship of the South Shore economy, is closing its hatches and going down next spring taking with it 101 years of shipbuilding tradition and 4,203 current jobs.

But, says Ronald Zooleck of Hingham, executive vice president of the South Shore Chamber of Commerce, the effect of the closing on South Shore towns may not be as catastrophic as it would have been in the past.

"Of course, it's going to have a negative impact," said Zooleck. "You can't take $350 million out of the state economy and not feel it.

"But every one in the area doesn't depend on the shipyard as much as they once did. There is a far more diverse economy on the South Shore. The impact will be spread over a greater area."

Figures obtained from the General Dynamics office in the shipyard show that 1018 workers live in Boston, 537 in Quincy and 405 in Weymouth. Those are the three largest worker communities.

Of the other towns on the South Shore, Braintree has 186, Hingham 59, Cohasset 29, Scituate 69, Hanover 40, Hull 79, Norwell 33, Pembroke 58, Marshfield 74 and Duxbury 30.

"A lot of the workers at the yard come from such places as New Hampshire and Rhode Island," said Zooleck. "Some come from other parts of the country to work on a particular contract. When it is over, they fully expected to move on.

"I'm sure the area will withstand the shock and replace the jobs. We have the lowest unemployment rate now. We will do as good a job a possible to find jobs for those who are laid off."

A total of 220 Fore River workers received pink slips last Thursday, the day after Gary Grimes, vice president and general manager, announced the imminent closing of the yard.

The projected manpower levels at the shipyard are: 4203 in July, 4072 in August, 2633 in November, 1507 in February, 657 in April and 153 or maintenance level by December, 1986.

Layoffs at the Fore River shipyard are hardly new, said Zooleck.

"There have been 101 years of layoffs at the shipyard," he said.

"Every time a new contract was announced the news was bitter-sweet. It meant that men would have jobs to do the work. But it also left them wondering what they would do when the contract was over. That is the history of the yard.

"Shipbuilding has never been a stable industry. The kind of ships that were built at Fore River were built as they were needed. You can't stockpile ships like they stockpile automobiles in Detroit."

The highest employment at the yard was in 1943 when about 32,000 workers, including 1200 women, were turning out warships at a record rate for the U.S. Navy in World War II.

There were 23,500 more employed at the satellite yard in Hingham for a grand total of 55,500.

The yard was essentially shut down for lack of work in 1963 when it was acquired by General Dynamics from the Bethleham Steel Co., which had owned it since 1913.

In recent years, the peak of employment has been around 6200 due to contracts to construct eight liquified natural gas (LNG) tankers and three prepositioning cargo ships for the Navy, the last of which will be completed in the spring.

There is nothing in the near future, Grimes told a news conference last Wednesday.

"To effectively utilize the Quincy shipyard requires a sales volume of approximately $125 million a year with an employment level of around 1500 people," he said.

"As we look forward, we can identify only two programs, the AOE and AE, which would eventually generate this level of sales and in which we have a reasonable chance of being competitive."

Those contracts, he said, will not be awarded until the end of 1986 at the soonest with construction beginning in late 1987 or early 1988.

"Even if we were to win the first AOE, we would not again reach an employment level of 1,500 people until mid-1989," he said.

Grimes said the future of the shipyard site in Quincy has not yet been determined. He conceded that General Dynamics had not given much thought to converting the yard from shipbuilding to other gainful pursuits.

"We have been devoting our efforts for the past 18 months to attempting to obtain new shipbuilding work," he said. "Now we are putting together a yard disposition team to determine what to do next."

Hull sewer limit starting to hurt

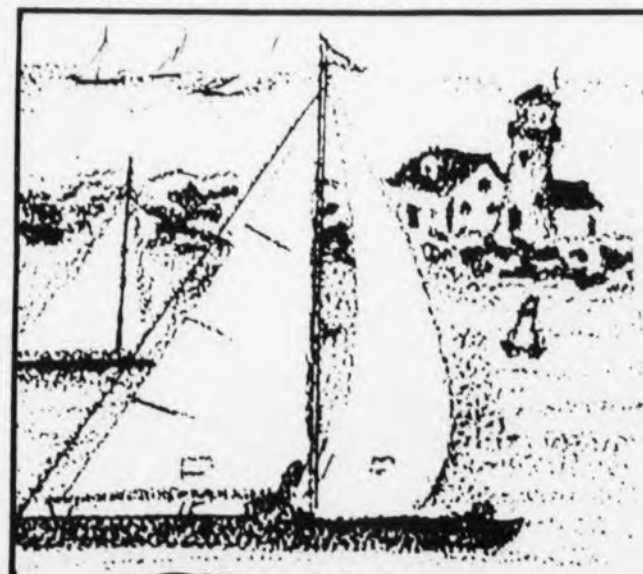
By Karen Cubie

The septage problem caused by the limit Hull officials have placed on the shippage of Cohasset waste to their plant is getting worse, Dr. Joseph Godzik, the town health agent said yesterday.

"The feedback from the pumpers indicates they have people on hold who need to pump and can't," Godzik said. "We have been fortunate that the weather has been so dry. It would be much worse if the water table was high. We'll have a problem this spring if we don't this winter."

Cohasset has been trying to find some place to accept the septage.

"No one has been able to take us yet," he said. "Brockton indicated they might be able to, but they can't do anything until their plant has been approved by their town. Hingham is in the process of trying to site a septage treatment facility. That would be a regional facility."



Godzik claims he can understand Hull's position.

"They're acting on the recommendations of their consulting engineer to improve the operation of the plant," he said. "But that doesn't help us any."

Senior center accepts offer

The Council on Aging has accepted the Community Center's invitation to begin the Senior Center at the North Main Street facility.

According to Community Center President Judy Volungis, the Senior Center should be in operation there by early fall.

The Council on Aging voted to accept the community center's invitation to share the North Main Street building, based on a recommendation made by the Senior Center Advisory Committee which for the past several months has been assessing the need for a center. The Senior Center will utilize a first floor room as an office, and will share a larger downstairs room and two upstairs rooms for senior center programs

The community center board of directors agreed last month to allow the Council on Aging use of the available rooms. The Senior Center Advisory Committee recommended the Council on Aging accept the offer and apply for local, state and federal funding to hire a director to supervise the center.

According to Karin Bartow, Senior Center Project Developer, the establishment of the Senior Center for Cohasset's 1,230 senior citizens will create a needed focal point for information, service and activities. In addition, it will allow the Council on Aging to increase the scope of those programs.

Daily and weekly activities at the community center or other community locations, would be designed to meet all phases of the health, educational, social and recreational needs of senior residents, she noted.

Programs will be coordinated with other town agencies and private groups to promote cooperation and understanding and to avoid duplication in services.

The community center, Bartow stated, has long worked to offer programming for all ages with emphasis from time to time on the older population. There is an active senior bowling league and a new exercise program will be offered this fall as a result of a successful trial at June's Senior Center Day.

According to the project developer, the center's site offers the potential for a blending of age groups and both organizations feel they will benefit from working together.

The Senior Center Advisory Committee also recommended the Council utilize an offer of the rooms at the Historical Society's Lothrop House. They may consider holding an acitivity there, such as a Men's Morning with cards, cribbage and lunch, according to Bartow.

The project developer will continue working in that capacity to assist the Council on Aging with a funding package, criteria for the position of director and other details regarding the opening of a Cohasset Senior Center.

Bridge repair work approved

By Karen Cubie

The Conservation Commission unanimously approved two notices of intent filed by Cohasset Highway Surveyor Harold Litchfield to rehabilitate the Border Street bridge (Mill Bridge) and the Atlantic Avenue bridge (Cunningham Bridge) at the July 30 meeting.

According to Litchfield, the Border Street bridge is the larger job.

"We plan to sandblast the metal bars beneath the bridge to see what condition the metal is in," Litchfield said. "We will replace the existing wooden guardrail with an aluminum rail. We also plan to replace one catchbasin, reasphalt the bridge, reset the curb, and install a new concrete walkover on the bridge."

Litchfield claims that the work will begin as soon as all the permits have been granted.

Last year in an effort to repair the two bridges and stop the kids from jumping, the town proposed installation of an eight-foot guardrail. Residents overwhelmingly opposed that idea and the concept was scrapped.

"We plan to take particular care that nothing falls into the water," he said. "If they sandblast we will have a canvas underneath to catch the debris.

"I don't know if the new guardrail will prevent (kids) from jumping off (into the rapids) or not," Litchfield continued. "I'm sure they'll find a way to do it anyhow."

The Cunningham Bridge was built in 1962 and has been deteriorating because of a break in the nearby water main.

"The sidewalk is tipping into the road," Litchfield said. "It must be pulled around. We also plan to pack new gravel, install a new sidewalk, and replace part of the guardrail."

The asphalt at the top of the bridge and on the approach will be replaced, and the curb will be reset.

"At the Cunningham Bridge cars pull in and hit the guardrail," Litchfield said. "Over the years it has deteriorated."

The commission also ruled Barbara Erikson of 68 Nichols Rd. should file for a determination of applicability. Erikson plans to install a jacuzzi within a structure next to her house.

SLEEP ON IT

Despite the fact that most of us spend up to one-third of our lives sleeping, we tend to pay very little attention to the quality of our mattresses. While bedding material may not cause back problems, it can contribute to them. A bed's worst trait is being too soft. It should provide firm support with direct contact all the way along the spine. The idea is to keep the spine as straight as it would be when we are awake, with the least amount of muscle tension. The ideal sleeping position is on our side in a modified fetal position. Never sleep on one's stomach. It forces one to twist the head into an improper position for the night. This will stress the neck muscles and can result in a stiff neck.

Improper position, while asleep as well as awake, can seriously impact upon one's well-being. For attention to such matters, a visit to the COHASSET CHIROPRACTIC OFFICE, 760 Chief Justice Cushing Hwy., Suite 12, is in order. A chiropractic exam will help determine the source of your problem and discomfort. Accordingly, chiropractic applications can be instituted to alleviate such trouble spots as well as offering helpful hints on daily routines. Your total state of well-being can be improved and you may well discover a happy and painfree existence. Tel. 383-1211, 1214. Daily by appt.

Center applies for hook-up

The attorney for the South Shore Art Center has resubmitted an application to the state Division of Water Pollution Control (DWPC) requesting approval of a modified use of the sewer system located at 115 Ripley Road.

This latest application to the state was required after the art center directors submitted a notice for an adjudicatory proceeding with the DWPC last week. Following that submittal, Attorney Roberta Sawyer was told to resubmit an application for modified use of the sewer system at the proposed art center location.

This latest turn of events is a result of DWPC Director Thomas McMahon's original denial of the art center's use of the sewer system located at their proposed site at 115 Ripley Road. That rejection was made by McMahon prior to the center's formal application to the state, and according to Atty. Sawyer, based on "hearsay and completely erroneous information."

The art center, which provides art classes and workshops for residents throughout the South Shore, is planning to relocate its headquarters to a larger facility now housing Tantillo's Autobody Shop. One of the requirements for the art center will be to obtain permission from the state to utilize the sewer system there. That constitutes a modification of the sewer system as currently utilized by the auto body shop.

The town has been under a sewer moratorium imposed by WPC in 1978. Therefore, no use can be allowed which will increase the flow into the system. The art center engineer's have determined that the center could limit its use to within the amount currently used and approved at the auto body shop.

According to Atty. Sawyer, the state is concerned with the modified use of the system, particularly with the center's photo lab waste devices. The lab would produce what the state terms commercial waste, resulting in a change of use of the sewer system.

"The information submitted by the art center further demonstrated," she continued, "that it could neutralize acids and separate harmful metals from its photo lab installation and that it could install a clay installation trap to collect any solids from its clay work classes."

In the center's notice of claim for an adjudicatory proceeding, Atty. Sawyer claimed that the DWPC received two requests from townspeople to determine the validity of the center's proposed use of the property. "These requests to the Division of Water Pollution Control were based on hearsay and completely erroneous information," according to Atty. Sawyer. "Despite this fact and despite the fact that the Division of Water Pollution Control has received no formal request from either the Art Center or the Cohasset Sewer Commission, the Division of Water Pollution Control wrongfully and without the full and complete facts issued a decision by its letters dated May 6, 1985 and May 7, 1985 denying the Art Center the right to modify the use of the sewer connection at 115 Ripley Road, Cohasset."

The Cohasset Sewer Commission held a public hearing on the connection request April 13 and later voted to approve the center's application. In response to the commission's approval notification to the state, the DWPC again denied the application on July 8.

According to Atty. Sawyer, the center has demonstrated that its proposed use would amount to about 50 gallons per day in the system, compared to the current usage of 327 gallons per day at the auto body shop.

In addition, Atty. Sawyer noted that the art center "has not been treated in the same manner that other applicants with regard to a proposed modified use of a sewer connection have been treated in the past." She stated in the notice of claim to the DWPC that prior applicants such as the Log and Line Restaurant have been allowed to modify the use of their connection "despite the fact that such modification resulted in an increased pollutant loading."

She continued, "the Division of Water Pollution Control simply appears to make up new regulations as they go along in order to prohibit any modifications and to coerce the Town of Cohasset into adopting what the Division considers the necessary solution to Cohasset's waste water treatment problems."

Atty. Sawyer explained it would take the DWPC a couple of weeks to decide on the center's reapplication for modified use of the sewer system.

The DWPC will take about 30-45 days to adopt a proposed finding regarding the center's notice for

MISREPRESENTATION OF FACT

Misrepresentation of fact is one type of wrong that can produce liability on the part of a manufacturer or seller when injury results from his product. Misrepresentation, unlike implied warranty, does not require the existence of any contract or agreement between buyer and seller. It does not involve an intent to mislead, while negligence involves carelessness. It does involve a false representation of fact made by the manufacturer. It also involves his knowledge that allows him to make such misrepresentation. There must also be an intent to induce the buyer to act in reliance upon the misrepresentation, the buyers actual reliance on it, and an injury to the buyer as a result of it.

Do you have grounds for a lawsuit? Have you been injured? Do you have the legal right to be compensated for damages suffered? ☐ Tom Wigmore really had a surprise in store for his dad, Steve, last weekend! Steve had a "BIG" birthday (no need to mention years here, just suffice it to say it was a biggie), and Tom gathered all of his friends and his relatives (Steve's sister and her family came from Vermont for the occasion) for a surprise party that was held at the George H. Mealy Post. The place was mobbed with celebrants and a grand time was had by all....Happy Birthday to you, Steve.

☐ Last week will go down in the history book for Brian Litchfield. . . .the baby book that is! Brian is three weeks old, and had his first trip to Bassings Beach, and he loved it! Bassings is certainly in his blood, as his grandmother. Ann Curley's family had a camp out there when she was Brian's age. The Curleys and the Litchfields all love the island, and you can bet that Brian will too. Of course he'll never get any attention out there. . everyone is in love with him already, and Brian goes down as the handsomest baby out there!!! Just ask Polly or Ann...

☐ Fred Koed just completed Course II of the 1985 Realtors Institute of Massachusetts held recently at the Best Western TLC in Waltham. Such subjects as residential construction and design, listings, pricing property, marketing, law, finance ethics management, advertising, urban growth structure and change, and governmental affairs are studied. Fred is with Hallmark 100.

☐ Jayne Nussdorfer, also with Hallmark 100 properties, also completed the course.

☐ Do remember to do your part for the historical society, and help them pay off the Lothrop House. As you may know, the Music Circus has given an $8,500 "challenge grant" to the historical society. They would like to pay the debt by Labor Day, so send your donation today.

☐ The Cohasset Swim Team is doing nicely, and the coaches Maureen Buckley and John Santini are extremely pleased with their record. As of last week, it was 3-0. Most of the swimmers' times have been "personal bests" with an especially impressive victory going to Greg Julian (Greg turned in a 28.2 for the 50 yard butterfly). Every week Buckley and Santini turn in stars of the week for attendance, dedication, ability and enthusiasm. Last week's "stars" were David Farrag, Chris Kondratt, Veronica Devos, Ali Welz and Tracy Reardon. Go and watch the team sometime, the meets are very exciting and the enthusiasm is "catchy"...before you know it you are screaming for Cohasset swimmers too! The team works long and hard, support them.

☐ Congratulations to Gregory Igo, 1985 CHS graduate and winner of the Rockland Trust Company Annual Scholarship Award. Greg is awarded $800 with this honor, and it is to help achieve his educational goal. Greg will be going to Colby College in the fall.

☐ Scoutmaster Arthur Lehr and assistant scoutmaster Merle Brown, were the adult leaders for the National Scout Jamboree that was held in Fort AP Hill, Virginia. The seven scouts that went from Cohasset were William Anstead, David Farrag, Mark Lavange, Michael Lelecas, Nichols Lelecas, Chris McElroy, and Matthew Silvia. The boys also had a chance to visit New York City and Washington D.C. They lived in tents. (Hope they were waterproof, as we all know about the weather they encountered...). It would be nice to have the scouts write an article about their jamboree, as it is an event that is considered to be a "chance of a lifetime" for a scout, and is only held once every four years.

☐ Receiving degrees from Boston University were Margaret Thomson Cowen, MSW in social work; Gail Elizabeth Smart, BS in journalism, magna cum laude.

☐ Steven B. Getto and Elaine C. Mullen of Cohasset have achieved distinction and have been named to the second-semester Dean's List for the 1984-85 academic year at Colby College (Waterville, Maine).

Getto, a sophomore administrative science major, is the son of Mr. Barry I. Getto of Jerusalem Road. He prepared for college at Middlesex School.

Mullen, a sophomore economics and East Asian studies major, is the daughter of Dr. and Mrs. James A. Mullen of South Main Street. She prepared for college at Cohasset High School.

Counsel to study deeds

"If the planning board approves the subdivision, such approval in no way certifies the developer's claim to the land title,vis avis, the Town of Cohasset's claim to the rights of way to that land," Pratt stated.

It is his understanding that the developers' attorney would present the planning board Wednesday night with the title of ownership to land off King Street. But the town will also produce a similar document demonstrating its claim to the title, he noted.

The water commission's interest in this proposed subdivision stems from its location within the town's watershed area protection district. The commission has employed Camp, Dresser and McKee engineers to complete an intensive study of the watershed, to legally determine its perameters and construct bylaws to protect that water supply area from future development. That study is expected to be completed within the year, with bylaws proposed by the April annual town meeting.

In a letter to the planning board earlier this month, the commission urged rejection of the proposed 11-lot subdivision. Stating the property trespasses upon the driveway of the Water Department plant, the commission also noted the land will illegally eliminate all privately-owned rights-of-way into the wooded area behind the subdivision.

Atty. James Marcus, representing the developers, has argued that those rights-of-way have been negated because of neglect and years of non use.

Pratt discussed what might occur should the planning board approve the subdivision this week. According to the commission chairman, if the plan is approved prior to the completion of the land title study, the commission may be forced into additional legal manuevering.

If building permits are rendered and equipment is readied for construction and roadwork, the commission would attempt to "seek legal action to halt any progress of the subdivision," Pratt commented.

"Any re-rendering of the land does impact on our claim to the property," he stated. "Any machinery on that property would trigger a mechanism on our part to stop it."

Last week, selectmen approved the commission's request to retain a special town counsel to investigate land title issues on that property. Town Counsel Henderson, who agreed with the need to employ a land court specialist, was scheduled to make the recommendation July 31.

Selectmen also agreed to place an article in the warrant for the fall special town meeting, requesting the town acquire the 36-acre parcel by eminent domain. Saying they were not voting at this time whether to support the article, they agreed it merited placement within the warrant.

The water commission requested that the town acquire the land to protect it from the proposed development, and from any future construction plans. In a letter to selectmen, Chairman Pratt explained that if proposed legislation known as the Land Bank is approved by the state, the land taking will not impact upon the Cohasset tax rolls.

Using monies set aside from annual real estate transactions, the town would acquire a sum to be used for such actions as purchasing land by eminent domain.

The Scrambler is coming.

The Scrambler will turn your dish into a $2,000 mistake.

They didn't believe it in California. They doubted reports that the most popular cable pay channels would scramble their signals. Instead, they listened to the dish antenna salesman. "It'll never happen," he said. Boy, was he wrong.

Last month, California dish owners turned to HBO and it was gone.

Now Showtime, Cinemax, and the other pay channels are set to scramble too. Before you know it, The Scrambler will be here.

Let's face it, if you've got a dish and The Scrambler comes, what have you got? On the other hand, if you've got American Cablesystems and The Scrambler comes, you've still got top quality programs and excellent service. And no $2,000 dinosaur sitting in your yard.

Good Luck

Tonight, August 1, is the night the South Shore Art Center will present plans to relocate its headquarters to 115 Ripley Road.

The Zoning Board of Appeal must decide whether to approve the change of use of the building, from an auto body shop, to one of the most popular and creative acitivities within the South Shore.

Residents from 40 Boston-area communities share classes and workshops at the smaller location down the street. The board of directors has long expressed a desire for larger facilities, and ultimately jumped at the chance to remain in Cohasset.

The owner of the auto body shop, weary of the endless bureacracy and red tape that threatened to close any deal, told the center directors to conclude the deal or it would be voided.

The directors answered affirmatively, realizing this would be the ideal location. Architectural renderings of the proposed site display an attractive building which offers everyone more - more classroom space, class offerings, and additional exhibit areas.

Everything would seem in order, except an issue which could eliminate all the progress the center hopes to achieve. For whatever reason, a former member of the board of directors took matters into her own hands and requested a decision from a state agency without benefit of a formal application. For the record, she enlisted the support of the sewer treatment plant supervisor who has long rejected any change which would effect the capacity of the town's sewer system.

The state agency in question is the state Division of Water Pollution Control and its Director Thomas McMahon. Without requesting or receiving any evidence or information from the center's engineers or attorneys, McMahon denied the center's proposed modified use of the sewer line at 115 Ripley Road. Since the 1978 state-imposed moratorium, no additional discharge or change of use of the sewer connection is permitted without state approval.

The center is in the midst of a complicated appeal of that hasty decision. It is a long process which we hope will not slow down the progress achieved by the center thus far.

The center's attorney noted in a recent communication to the state DWPC that other modifications of the town's sewer system have been approved by the state, including recent renovations to the neighboring Log and Line Restaurant. Atty. Roberta Sawyer also noted that the local sewer commission unanimously approved the change of use.

The heart of the dissension is the inclusion of a photo processing lab within the center. Of some concern to the local sewer commission, that group recommended the state accept the proposal possibly by attaching certain conditions to its approval.

The bottom line, according to Atty. Sawyer, is if the state will not accept the sewer connection with the lab, then it will be eliminated. That one element of the application should not stand in the way of the total issue.

We see the state's premature denial as inaccurate and inappropriate. Our hope is that the Art Center succeeds in its endeavors. We wish them greater success than the local sewer commissioners have experienced with this state agency.

Correcting committee article

Letters

To the Editor:

I would like to make some corrections concerning some statements in the article "Committee discusses meeting violation" which appeared in the July 25 Cohasset Mariner.

First of all, the Town Government Structure Committee at its July 16 meeting did not discuss any "meeting violation." At this meeting, the committee met with Edward Donnelly of the state Executive Office of Communities and Development to discuss the proposal of Selectmen to combine the positions of Executive Secretary and Town Accountant.

The committee did not reach any conclusions nor take any votes regarding the proposal. Some members of the committee did express unfavorable comments about the proposal. The committee is continuing its investigation of the proposal and will make a formal recommendation to a future Town Meeting.

While Selectmen did temporarily create the joint position by appointing one person to fill both positions on May 9, the position needs Town Meeting approval before becoming permanent. The Selectmen were not "restrained by the district attorney's office" from combining the positions, as the article stated.

It was my understanding that Ed Donnelly, while he works for a state agency, was giving his personal opinions based on his training and experience, and was not giving "the state's point of view" as the article stated.

Donnelly told the committee that out of 351 cities and towns in Massachusetts, 60 towns have the position of Executive Secretaries. He provided the committeewitha list of 14 of those 60 towns - a total of 14 towns ranging in population from 394 to 28,218 which have the joint position of Executive Secretary/Town Accountant.

The article incorrectly stated that "Eighty percent of towns with populations over 7000 have created such a position..." Donnelly told the committee of only 14 towns with such a joint position - only 23 percent of the 60 towns with Executive Secretaries.

The article correctly stated that I made a complaint to the District Attorney's office about a violation of the Open Meeting Law by selectmen as a private citizen, and not as a member or Chairman of the committee.

Since the complaint I made was as a private citizen and was not official business of the committee, we did not discuss the complaint during the meeting. After adjournment of the committee I informally discussed the status of the complaint, which at that point had resulted in a letter from the District Attorney to the Selectmen stating that their executive session of May 4 had been held in violation of the Open Meeting Law.

Following the letter from the DA, as described in the Mariner article "Selectmen vow to follow the law," the selectmen took the two actions suggested by the DA - they had an open discussion of the matters discussed at the May 4 executive session, and they passed a resolution to strictly comply with the Open Meeting Law in the future.

Concerning the proposal to combine the positions of Executive Secretary and Town Accountant, the members of the committee are now in the process of contacting town officials where such a joint position exists, to further assess the pros and cons of the proposal.

The committee will be meeting again on August 20 to discuss the proposal.

John K. McNabb Jr.

Get your facts

To the Editor:

In the July 17/18th edition of the Mariner, David Mittell, Jr., writes in opposition to recent legislation providing financial aid for Boston and other cities in the Commonwealth. In his column, he criticizes Common Cause for not objecting publicly to the manner in which the measure was approved in the state Senate, saying:

"In short, they "whored" themselves, there is no other way to put it, and they did so because in this instance they decided that "the end justified the means."

Had he taken the time to contact Common Cause, Mittell could have gotten some facts for his column. Common Cause did not work for or against the Boston financial aid legislation. We did not take, or even consider taking, a position on the issue, as the writer claims.

Had he bothered to contact Common Cause or anyone else more than vaguely familiar with state politics, the columnist could have learned that for the last decade, Common Cause has been a leader in the uphill fight to bring openness and democracy to the state legislative process—from supporting internal efforts at rules reform to building and leading a broad-based coalition of groups in a ballot question campaign for legislative reform.

If his target is the complacency and cooperation which supports the Senate autocracy, Mittell's aim is poorly placed when he points a finger at Common Cause. Furthermore, if his purpose is to stimulate public concern and action through informative, thought-provoking commentary, he would do better to give Mariner readers the level of accuracy and journalistic standards they deserve.

Sincerely,
Elizabeth A. Fay
Executive Director
Common Cause

Response to D.A.

(This letter was written to Assistant District Attorney Charles J. Hely by John K. McNabb, Jr. Ed.)

Dear Mr. Hely:

I am in receipt of a copy of your July 12 letter to Chairman Frank W. England of the Cohasset Board of Selectmen, where you ruled that the executive session of the Selectmen on May 4, 1985 was held in violation of the Municipal Open Meeting Law, G.L.

Bay Coast Medical Center now open

With the opening of Bay Coast Medical Center in Cohasset Village July 29, Steve T. Golden, M.D., and Ronald H. Goldenson, M.D., both affiliated with South Shore Hospital, will combine a traditional family practice with the convenience and accessibility of a walk-in service. Dr. Golden will practice family medicine by appointment, while Dr. Goldenson will head the walk-in service.

"We had seen the frustration many people experience when they are not able to receive prompt medical attention," explained Dr. Goldenson. "Patients have had to wait for hours in a busy hospital emergency room. By opening Bay Coast Medical Center, we are offering a solution to that problem."

A doctor will be present in the walk-in service from 8 a.m. to 8 p.m. every day and from 8 a.m. to 4 p.m. on holidays. "Patients will have the choice of making an appointment in advance or walking through the door," added Dr. Goldenson. In addition, both Dr. Goldenson and Dr. Golden will provide 24-hour-a-day availability for their patients, as they have in the past.

Bay Coast Center will provide Cohasset and neighboring towns with a full spectrum of medical services, including complete X-ray, EKG and laboratory facilities, as well as cardiac stress testing. Dr. Golden, an established family practitioner in Cohasset, will be moving his office from Cohasset Harbor to the new medical center. Dr. Goldenson will be practicing internal medicine at Bay Coast, while devoting the majority of his time to the wide variety of medical problems requiring prompt attention.

In addition to the services provided by Dr. Golden and Dr. Goldenson, sub-specialists will be available in orthopedics, dermatology, neurology and psychology. The Center's X-ray facility will be under the supervision of Ronald J. Messer, M.D., an experienced radiologist and coordinated by chief X-ray technologist, Jacklyn H. Cartwright, R.T. Bay Coast's laboratory will be headed by Janet Fisher, M.T.

Ronald Goldenson is a graduate of Princeton University; he received his medical degree from Harvard Medical School in 1968. Dr. Goldenson completed a three-year internship and residency at Peter Bent Brigham Hospital (now Brigham & Women's Hospital) in Boston, where he is still affiliated. He has been on the staff of South Shore Hospital in the Department of Medicine since 1974. Dr. Goldenson has practiced emergency medicine at the hospital for the past seven years while maintaining a private practice in internal medicine in Weymouth. He will continue his practice in Weymouth along with his practice at Bay Coast Medical Center.

Steven T. Golden, M.D., graduated from Harvard College and the University of Syracuse Medical School. He completed a three-year residency in family practice at St. Joseph's Hospital in Syracuse, New York, and has been in private practice in Cohasset since 1981. Dr. Golden is on the staff of South Shore Hospital with privileges in medicine, pediatrics and obstetrics. He is also the Director of Employee Health at the hospital.

Sandra Moore, R.N., will be the head nurse at Bay Coast Medical Center. She is a graduate of the Massachusetts General Hospital School of Nursing and has had 14 years of experience in critical care and emergency nursing at South Shore Hospital.

Bay Coast Medical Center is located in Cohasset Village adjacent to Cohasset Town Parking Area. for further information on Bay Coast Medical Center, please call 383-1155.

(This is the resolution adopted by the Board of Selectmen and circulated to all town committees, to "read this and conduct business in the spirit of it." Selectmen were advised to adopt the resolution after the DA's office determined they were in violation of the Open Meeting Law on May 4. Ed.)

RESOLUTION

(ii) To consider the discipline or dismissal of, or to hear complaints or charges against, a public officer, employee, staff member or individual provided, that the individual involved in such writing by the governmental body in accordance with the provisions of Massachusetts General Law, Chapter 39, Section 23B and is afforded the rights provided therein;

(iii) To discuss strategy with respect to collective bargaining or litigation if an open meeting may have a detrimental effect on the bargaining or litigation position of the governmental body, and to conduct collective bargaining sessions;

(iv) To discuss the deployment of security personnel or devices;

(v) To investigate charges of criminal misconduct or to discuss the filing of criminal complaints;

That the Board of Selectmen shall circulate a memorandum to all Town Boards and Departments requiring adherence to the following procedure in connection with the conduct of any Executive Sessions.

Response to D.A.

c. 39, S. 23A-23C.

In response to your letter, the Selectmen at their meeting of July 22 carried out the actions suggested by your office. The Selectmen conducted an open discussion of the matters discussed at the May 4 executive session, and then passed a resolution stating their intent to strictly comply with the Open Meeting Law at future meetings.

Furthermore, the Selectmen circulated a copy of the resolution to all town boards and committees with a request that they read the resolution and conduct business in the spirit of the Open Meeting Law (copy of memo enclosed).

The Selectmen responded promptly and appropriately to the requests made by your office. Therefore, I request that no further action be taken by your office with respect to my complaint.

Thank you for your assistance in this matter.

Sincerely,
John K. McNabb, Jr.

'Barnum' set for this weekend

Meet the youth cast of the Young People's Summer Theatre 'Barnum' set for this weekend at Scituate High School.

The Young People's Summer Theatre will present its ninth annual musical production "Barnum," Thursday, Friday, and Saturday, Aug. 1, 2 and 3 at 8 p.m. in Scituate High School.

Gilman improves/ fundraising begins

Hingham Mariner Editor Judy Gilman, showing significant medical improvement, has been transfered from South Shore Hospital to the Braintree Hospital for extensive therapy.

Judy was seriously injured in a one-car accident on Route 228 in Hingham June 12 but has improved every week since the accident.

Judy, said John Gilman, her husband, is "talking more and more and is moving her arms and legs more and more. She will be wearing real clothing now."

Judy will be in a 10 to 12-week therapeutic program and will be staying in Room 203 B, a semi-private room at the Braintree Hospital, 250 Pond Street, Braintree. Visiting hours are 4 to 8 p.m. and noon to 8 p.m. Sunday.

John has been encouraged by the number of area residents and friends of the family who have continued to cheer Judy and the Gilman family throughout the recovery. He still encourages people to visit Judy during the times allowed at the hospital.

FUNDRAISING ACCOUNT

A fundraising account has been established to pay for Judy's medical bills at the Hingham Institution for Savings. Checks should be made payable to the Judy Gilman Fund, care of the Hingham Institution for Savings, 55 Main St., Hingham, Mass. 02043.

A steering committee with an honorary chairman will soon be formed to plan a special fundraising dinner-dance in October. Members of this committee and further information about the fundraiser will be published soon.

Currently the center's board of directors and Sawyer are meeting with DWPC Director McMahon to answer any questions he has regarding the modified use application.

The directors are scheduled to appear tonight, August 1, before the Cohasset Zoning Board to request a special permit to relocate their headquarters.

Fast buck

The public and business should be wary of fast-buck promoters attempting to peddle everything from commemorative coins to key chains and claiming that a portion of the proceeds raised by purchasing these items will go toward restoring the Statue of Liberty.

The U.S. Department of the Interior has authorized the Statue of Liberty/ Ellis Island Foundation as the ONLY organization entitled to raise funds and to make arrangements with private businesses for fund-raising activities.

Next time someone tries to sell you something and wraps themselves in the American Flag, apple pie and the Statue of Liberty, call the Better Business Bureau, Inc., to see if the Lady getting the help is really the Statue of Liberty.

Place named bank director

David E. Place

David Elliott Place of Cohasset, Deputy Commissioner to the Disarmament Talks in Geneva and a Partner of Gaston Snow & Ely Bartlett, one of the largest law firms in New England, has been named to the Board of Directors of Merchants Cooperative Bank of Boston.

The announcement was made by John R. Lakian, Chairman of the Board and William E. Macneill, President and Chief Executive of Merchants.

From 1981-1984, Place worked in the Pentagon as General Counsel to the United States Air Force. Place's other Massachusetts and Washington-held offices were from 1953-1955 when he was Assistant United States Attorney and Assistant to the United States Attorney General. Place's other political activities include serving as vice president of the Massachusetts Republican Club and chairman of the Arrangements Committee of the Massachusetts Delegation to the 1980 GOP Convention in Detroit. He was also town moderator for Cohasset, Massachusetts from 1969-1984.

Place's past offices include vice president and director of the New England Forestry Foundation and a Trustee of Massachusetts Trustees of Reservations, he is also director and secretary of Jackson Laboratory in Bar Harbor, Maine, as well as being a board member for a number of corporations and trusts.

Place has also been affiliated with the New England Deaconess Hospital Corporation, Boston Y.M.C.A. Corporation and the International Institute of Boston.

He graduated from Milton Academy, Harvard College and Harvard Law School. Place resides in Cohasset.

Gilman improves/ fundraising begins

Hingham Mariner Editor Judy Gilman, showing significant medical improvement, has been transfered from South Shore Hospital to the Braintree Hospital for extensive therapy.

Judy was seriously injured in a one-car accident on Route 228 in Hingham June 12 but has improved every week since the accident.

Judy, said John Gilman, her husband, is "talking more and more and is moving her arms and legs more and more. She will be wearing real clothing now."

Judy will be in a 10 to 12-week therapeutic program and will be staying in Room 203 B, a semi-private room at the Braintree Hospital, 250 Pond Street, Braintree. Visiting hours are 4 to 8 p.m. and noon to 8 p.m. Sunday.

John has been encouraged by the number of area residents and friends of the family who have continued to cheer Judy and the Gilman family throughout the recovery. He still encourages people to visit Judy during the times allowed at the hospital.

FUNDRAISING ACCOUNT

A fundraising account has been established to pay for Judy's medical bills at the Hingham Institution for Savings. Checks should be made payable to the Judy Gilman Fund, care of the Hingham Institution for Savings, 55 Main St., Hingham, Mass. 02043.

A steering committee with an honorary chairman will soon be formed to plan a special fundraising dinner-dance in October. Members of this committee and further information about the fundraiser will be published soon.

adjudicatory process. The state will advertise its position and invite public comment. The final decision by the state following that process is appealable to Superior Court.

Currently the center's board of directors and Sawyer are meeting with DWPC Director McMahon to answer any questions he has regarding the modified use application.

The directors are scheduled to appear tonight, August 1, before the Cohasset Zoning Board to request a special permit to relocate their headquarters.

Fast buck

The public and business should be wary of fast-buck promoters attempting to peddle everything from commemorative coins to key chains and claiming that a portion of the proceeds raised by purchasing these items will go toward restoring the Statue of Liberty.

The U.S. Department of the Interior has authorized the Statue of Liberty/ Ellis Island Foundation as the ONLY organization entitled to raise funds and to make arrangements with private businesses for fund-raising activities.

Next time someone tries to sell you something and wraps themselves in the American Flag, apple pie and the Statue of Liberty, call the Better Business Bureau, Inc., to see if the Lady getting the help is really the Statue of Liberty.

Cohasset summer sports scene . . .

By Lisa Shumaker

Flying Scot Race Series

The Flying Scots had two races this weekend, the first of which was held Saturday afternoon. Under a clear sky and a moderate wind, eleven Scots raced. This huge fleet, which was the biggest of the season, provided a very exciting race.

Peter Chapman and his crew, Jean Baccari, proved to be the best sailors of the day as they finished first. Jack McCarthy picked up a second, followed by Ray Kasperowicz who came in third.

Sunday, the wind picked up and Peter Chapman continued his winning streak as he finished first once again. In second place was the Ellis/Forter boat, and Steve Bartow came in third.

Varsity Girls Basketball

Tuesday, the girls played a near perfect game and annihilated Weymouth 50-19. Cohasset out played Weymouth both offensively and defensively. The skippers were especially impressive on defense which helped to spark their fast break.

Early in the game Cindy Spooner led Cohasset's offensive attack, sinking six out of eight foulshots and crashing the boards. Both Maureen Farren and Margie Murphy were the primary factors leading to Cohasset's final surge forward to pull away from Weymouth for good.

Friday, the girls began their playoff season with a victory over a tough Whitman/Hanson team. Cohasset had previously lost to this club, but switched to a scrambling man-for-man defense this time around which Whitman/Hanson could not handle.

Margie Murphy kept the Skippers alive on offense burying several jump shots from the right wing. The key to the victory came from the hustling defense of both Maria Cahill and Sara Dickerman.

This week the girls will try to continue their winning streak as they face Weymouth again Sunday at 5:30 p.m.

Freshmen Boys Basketball

The freshmen boys continued their success last week as they beat a strong Plymouth/Carver team 53-49.

David Shultz provided Cohasset's spark on offense as he shoveled in 16 points to become the team's high scorer. Chris Watters also had a good game adding 12 points to Cohasset's total. Rich Reddick and Matt Maloney both played well for the Skippers and had nine points each.

Wednesday, the boys squeezed out a victory over Duxbury, 49-35. Cohasset got off to a quick start in the first quarter and held on to a substantial lead by halftime. However, in the third quarter Duxbury closed within five, but the boys held on and pulled it out in the fourth to win.

Jason Marsac led all scorers with 13 points followed by Chris Watters with 11 and Matt Maloney with 10. Derick Lax also turned in a good effort for the Skippers and was a powerhouse off the boards.

Cohasset Swim Team

The swim team's meet Friday against Duxbury was rained out. However, that did not slow down the team. They swam past the Aquadux in the makeup meet Monday by an overwhelming margin of 140 points. Coach Jay Santini was pleased with Cohasset's performance but not surprised, for he feels strongly that his team is "unstoppable."

By Melissa L. Barcomb

The Strawberry Parfait softball team won both games of a double-header played Sunday against Hingham.

In the first game, the Parfait maintained a lead and finally finished with a Parfait victory of 14-9.

Torin Sweeney's hustling and admirable effort provided the team with four hits. Sweeney was up to bat four times and connected each time.

Team members agreed that he was the star of game one.

Right up there with Torin Sweeney's hitting was Donny Cahill's great defensive plays.

In game two, Marty McGinn pitched a powerful game, despite the scorching heat.

Paul Lemieux's playing was definitely commendable in both games.

Donny Cahill smacked a three run homer in game two and although all sixteen members on the team didn't hit home runs, each team member did get a hit.

Game two ended with a score of 18-3, another win for the Strawberry softball team.

Mormon returns home from Australia

By Karen Cubie

Alan Turner had no idea he'd be assigned to Australia when he volunteered to be a Mormon missionary for 18 months.

"I couldn't come home at all," he said. "I had to live off my own savings. I really loved Australia. I could live there if my family was there."

When Alan left for Australia his home was in Utah. While he was away, his father transferred, and the family moved to Cohasset. Alan returned to the states and to Cohasset on June 2.

"I find the New England people tremendous," he said. "They remind me of the Australian people. The culture is similar."

Alan left for Australia in November 1983.

"It was completely voluntary," he said. "A high percentage of the males in the church go on the missions. We're allowed to go when we turn 19. Girls can go when they're over 21. (The church feels that marriage is more important for them.) When you fill out the application you don't know where you're going. A few of my friends went to California."

Alan's work involved going from door to door and doing street work to spread the Mormon faith.

"The whole purpose of the mission is to teach about Christ, the resurrection, and the plan of salvation," he said. "We had a set of standard discussions. If people were interested they could join. "I have a strong conviction," he continued. "It was hard. I'm not one to pressure, but if you're interested, I'm more than happy to share my beliefs."

Until his mission to Australia, Alan had spent his entire life in the heavily Mormon culture of Utah.

"I don't miss being surrounded by people of my own faith," he said. "You get slack because you don't have to constantly stand up for your beliefs.

"People here have really respected me for my beliefs. I'm as normal as everyone else. I just have a higher standard of living. People ask me a lot of questions."

Alan is a fourth generation Mormon.

"My grandmother joined in England and came over to the states," he said. "One of my great-great grandmothers was cut off from her family because of her involvement with the church."

Alan claims he has been faced more with ignorance of his beliefs from people in this area than any kind of prejudice.

"People think we worship Joseph Smith," he said. "But our name is the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints. People also don't think we believe in the Bible. We believe in the Bible as the word of God. Mormonism is a big part of western American history.

Alan also claims that people misunderstand the church's involvement with polygamy.

"The Lord revealed to Brigham Young, one of the early leaders, that righteous men could practice it," he said. "People were moving west at that point, and a lot of men were dying. Many women were left without any means of support. Only about 2% of the men in the church practiced it, and it was a calling for them. When laws were passed against it, the church stopped the practice. Some people still practice it, but the church doesn't condone it."

Alan Turner

Alan claims that everything in New England is different from Utah.

"The biggest difference is the lack of mountains," he said. "It's also heavily wooded, and the accent is so strong. I miss the snow skiing in Utah. Technically you can't ski all year round, but there is a glacier. I also water ski."

Alan had completed his sophomore year as an architect major at Weber State College before he left on his mission. He plans to return to school in the fall, but he has not decided whether to return to his old school, or stay in this area.

"I'd like to stay here," he said. "I've really got to start looking."

Alan would like to visit Australia again someday.

"I'll probably go back for the America's Cup in January, 1987," he said. "I miss the hot weather. I liked Perth best; the people were the friendliest there. It's like the California of Australia."

Alan even had his own kangaroo during his stay.

"We had it as a pet when we were in the Southern Sea coast town of Albany," he said. "His name was Luke."

"What did Alan miss most about the states while he was away?

"I missed my family and friends," he said. "All I could do was correspond.

"I especially missed M&Ms."

Health Board attacks algae; discuss recycling

The Board of Health announced Straits Pond will be herbicided sometime during the next two weeks with an organic phosphate called endethol. At Tuesday night's meeting, the members of the board warned residents on the pond to take notice as swimming is prohibited for 24 hours after the process, fishing banned for three days after, and irrigation for seven days.

The herbiciding is designed to kill the excess algae that builds up on the pond during the summer months. It was previously scheduled to be done last week, but the contractor was unable to come.

The Cohasset landfill's efforts to help in the recycling of paper and metal have been temporarily blocked. The recycling service no longer comes by to pick up the paper and metal because there is no market for recycling these products. As a result two huge piles of metal and paper have accumulated at the dump. Landfill supervisor Joseph Laugelle told the board he has no choice but to dump the piles in the landfill.

Laugelle also informed the board he cannot adhere to the hours of operation scheduled for the landfill without more qualified help. At least one more qualified bulldozer operator is needed," said Laugelle.

The Board of Health outlined its options which are: to hire a full-time qualified operator at $7 or $8 an hour, hire a part-time operator at $4.50 an hour, or close the dump when there is no qualified operator on duty.

The South Shore Music Circus will be required by the board to purchase a business permit to dispose trash at the landfill. The Music Circus, a non-profit organization, has never been charged for using the landfill.

The landfill is also the site of a new salt shed to protect the town's supply of salt for de-icing the roads in the winter. Operational requirements for the salt shed will be sent to the selectmen this week.

A grading system to classify Cohasset's restaurants and food retailers will be devised by Health Agent Joseph Godzik and presented at the next meeting of the Board on August 12.

Grant awarded Conservatory

By Karen Cubie

The South Shore Conservatory of Music in Hingham will be receiving an $18,000 incentive grant from the Massachusetts Council on Arts and Humanities.

"It was granted for this fiscal year to underwrite and provide cultural opportunities," said Denise Ripley, the Director of Communications at the Conservatory. "We have received Merit Aid for the last few years for a quality program."

"Only organizations who have received Merit Aid are eligible for the grant," Jim Dady, the Director of Public Information for the Mass. Council of Arts and Humanities said. "Merit Aid is a two year program."

"The money comes from the Arts Lottery," State Representative Mary Jeanette Murray said. "The grants go to various non-profit groups."

The Mass. Council received applications from 78 groups for these grants this year.

"The requests for the grants amounted to $1,246,712," Dady said. "We had $264,649 alotted for the total incentive grant program for the 1985 fiscal year. We have $200,000 alotted for the 1986 fiscal year."

The Council accepted applications, and placed them through a panel review process.

"The panels reviewed the applications by discipline," Dady said. "They made site visits with the assistance of the staff. Then they made recommendations to the Council. The Council determines how much money will be available and makes the final decision on who will receive the grant."

"The grant is to continue and expand our programs. There are only a few given out each year," Denise Ripley said. "Special groups have come down to give workshops to ethnic communities in the Boston area free of charge. Last fall we had a program at which two groups -- the Art of Black Dance and Music, and the Ramon de los Reyes Spanish Dance Theater -- gave a series of cross cultural workshops free of charge for children. Later they gave a performance at Massassoit Community College with the children in the classes. We have conducted an Afro-American Choir with selections from Afro-American music, and given a free performance."

The Conservatory plans to hold a series of workshops on dance and other performance arts geared to various ethnic communities this summer in the Brockton area. The workshops will be offered in cooperation with the Brockton YMCA and area public schools.

The South Shore Conservatory performed this summer at the Hingham Harbor bandstand. (Carol McCann)

Docking facility at Rowe's Wharf

The Beacon Companies has provided a new docking facility at Rowes Wharf for commuter, excursion and charter boats serving Boston and the South Shore.

Located along the southern border of the Rowes Wharf site adjacent to 400 Atlantic Avenue, the new facility provides a safe walkway and dock for passengers of the three boat operators who are using the Rowes Wharf area throughout construction of the $180 million mixed-use development.

Massachusetts Bay Lines operates four boats from Rowes Wharf. A commuter boat departs Hewitt's Cove Marina in Hingham at 7:10 a.m. with a return trip leaving Rowes Wharf at 5:20 p.m. Regularly scheduled excursions from Rowes Wharf include three round trips to George's Island on Saturday and Sunday from May through October, and daily excursions from June 29th through Labor Day. In addition, Massachusetts Bay Lines operates school trips, senior citizen lunch cruises, a dinner boat and special charters. For more information, call Massachusetts Bay Lines at 749-4500.

Boston Harbor Commuter Service operates three high-speed commuter boats on weekdays from the Hingham Shipyard on Rte. 3A in Hingham. The 11 round trips made each day begin with a 6:10 a.m. departure from Hingham and end with a 7:30 p.m. departure from Rowes Wharf. The crossing time is 30 minutes. For more information, call Boston Harbor Commuter Service at 740-1253.

The Marina Bay Commuter Co. has launched an Airport Water Shuttle Service to Logan Airport from 400 Atlantic Avenue in Boston, and Squantum on the South Shore. This service, which began on July 1, is being offered under contract from Massport as part of that agency's effort to reduce traffic congestion to and from Logan and encourage more people to leave their cars at home. Marina Bay offers 20 trips Monday through Saturday and 13 trips on Sunday. Massport will provide passengers with free shuttle bus service to and from the Logan South/Harborside boat dock at the airport to all terminals. Travel time between downtown Boston and Logan is ten minutes. The trip from the South Shore to Logan is 45 minutes including a stop in downtown Boston. For further information, call The Marina Bay Commuter Co. at 328-0600.

When the new Rowes Wharf project is completed in 1987, it will include a permanent ferry terminal and ferry pavilion, pleasure boat slips, and a dinghy dock. Rowes Wharf will also offer water taxi service to Logan Airport. Two-thirds of the 5.38 acre land and water site is devoted to a waterfront walkway and other public amenities.

Synchro- swimmer reaches for national goals

By Karen Cubie

Carol Henry never forced her daughter, Annie, to become a synchronized swimmer.

"I waited a long time for her to come to me and say, 'Mom, I want to do this,' " she said. "I was thrilled when she did. You can introduce a child to something, but you can't make a kid work and compete unless she wants to."

Thirteen-year old Annie walked away from the Bay State Games on July 13 with a gold medal for her solo performance.

She has been swimming with the Nagettes at the South Shore YMCA in Quincy. The team is coached by her mother.

"Annie is the highest figure holder in the group," Carol Henry said. "The other kids are all much older. Annie is the youngest, and she's been beating the other kids all year."

The Bay State Games was not Annie's first big meet. This year she placed fourth in the New England Junior Competition. After that she went to the sectional meet where she placed third. At the beginning of April she went to the Age Group National meet in Ohio.

"I placed 30th out of about 34," Annie said. "One girl from Massachusetts placed 7th. The rest were from the West-- California and Arizona. Out there they practice every day for at least four hours."

Annie and her mother plan to move out to Arizona in August in order to spend a year training with Linda Lichter, a National Age Group Coach and a National judge.

"Linda is probably the best Age Group Synchro Coach in the U.S. right now," Carol Henry said. "She was the Hampton Connecticut Coach, and her team went to all the National meets; but two years ago her husband left Yale University, and got transferred to Phoenix. She had to start all over again. Within two years she had seven kids already making the Age Group National meets."

Annie would join the Arizona Aqua Stars for the year.

"Linda had two kids at the Age Group meet [in April]. We all had the idea of Annie going out there for a year," Carol said. "All the other girls on the team are from Arizona."

Carol Henry has been involved with the sport since High School. She coaches the Nagettes, and she is a level three judge.

"I've passed the third National test," she said. "I have two more to go-- regionals and zone-- then nationals are left. I don't think I'll go that far."

The trip will be as much of a learning experience for Mrs. Henry as it will be for her daughter.

"The sport has changed drastically within the last 10 years," she said. 'The ones winning are all college age. All we're hoping to do is allow me to get knowledge so I an come back and help her. She has reached a level I have to catch up to. Right now I can coach her, but within a year I'll need to know more. Coaching for competition is a whole different ball game."

Carol Henry not only coaches Annie and the Nagettes, she also does the choreography, plans the music, and designs the costumes.

"This sport is very much like figure skating," she said. "What does the girl look like? Is she dramatic? These all figure into the judging. There's more to it than just judging who reaches the other end of the pool first."

NEARLY NATIVE — by DARRELL BERGER

Dignity on wheels

The summer movie "Cocoon" is a kind of E.T. for senior citizens. The aliens come down and help make their dreams come true, though not without complications.

One dream centers around the automobile. An old fellow is reading an eye chart at the Department of Motor Vehicles. He stumbles as the letters get smaller and fails the test.

The next scene shows him putting his big old, clean American car in moth balls. His emotional state is a complex caldron of rage and embarrassment. This is because being denied the privilege to drive is, in most parts of the country, to lose no small measure of dignity.

For senior citizens, and their friends and family, this is a particularly difficult dilemma. Being able to drive is, for elders, a more crucial sign of independence and self-respect than it is even for teenagers. For both it is a rite of passage, but for those who are no longer capable, it is a passage no one wishes to undertake.

Yet the laws some states have requiring periodical driver's tests after a certain age are good. We should have one in Massachusetts.

I have many friends of relatively advanced age. Many of them are physically vigorous and have compiled fine driving records over decades. But others have not been as fortunate. Yet they keep their licenses and keep on the road long after they have become hazards to themselves and others.

The reason we allow this is easy to rationalize. They need their mobility for the same reasons we all do: shopping, entertaiment, business, emergencies, all of the hundreds of tasks which add up to being a fully-active citizen, especially in the suburbs.

Saying no to the driver who has failing sight and reflexes is difficult, because it takes from them so much. And the seniors themselves, be they the soul of rationality on other issues, can be intransigent on this one.

There is a bumper sticker, often seen on pickup trucks in rural areas, that says, "I'll give up my gun when they take it out of my cold, dead hand." Sometimes I feel some oldsters ought to have one saying, "I'll give up my steering wheel when they take it out of my cold, dead hands."

Not being able to drive is tough. I've found that out on two brief occassions when my right foot has been in a cast. Sure, people offer to take you places, but after calling on everyone a couple of times you begin to feel you're imposing. If you're not lucky enough to have a cooperative family around, you're really handicapped.

That's why I have special respect for those who do not drive who are yet able to go out and get to places. I know what a difficult job it is. I also know they have the rare ability to place their dignity beyond the reach of the automobile. If only more people, of all ages, could do this.

People who work with problem drinkers pray for the day the drinker gets ticketed for driving under the influence, not for the punitive effects, but the therapeutic. They know the drinker has been driving drunk many times, and is a potential focus of needless tragedy.

They also know that getting a ticket for drunk driving often brings the drinker to reality. They will say, "I don't have a problem, quit bugging me," until they get nailed. It can end the period of denial and encourage the drinker to change, as well as get a hazard off the road.

Periodic renewal of elder licenses could do the same thing. Growing older isn't necessarily the happiest fact of life, but it beats the alternative. It can be made as positive as possible by being honest, facing the changes it causes, and finding healthy means of responding to them.

The elder who continues to drive after becoming a safety risk has probably also denied other fundamental facts which contribute to a retirement less honest and contented than it could be. Adjustments in life-style aren't easy at any age. The older one gets, often the more difficult they become.

People of all ages need to be aware of these adjustments, and offer help to their older friends and members in making them. Most especially we can help by assuring them that dignity and freedom will not rest only on the wheels of their automobiles.

(Darrell Berger is minister of the First Parish Unitarian Church of Scituate.)

Politicus — by David A. Mittell, Jr.

A shipyard closes: misfortune and opportunity

The announcement by General Dynamics of the impending death of its century-old shipyard in Quincy has produced as its first effect a round of recriminations. Democrats suggest out loud that the Reagan Administration has an animus against Massachusetts that is behind this news. Republicans counter that a Democratic Congressional delegation that opposes the government 99 percent of the time on military matters begs to be visited by troubles such as this. Soon to be unemployed workers scorn Senators Kerry and Kennedy for their preoccupation with international issues and their alleged distaste for "bread and butter" issues. One may be reasonably certain that Sen. Kennedy's famous, cynical "he can do more for Massachusetts" 1962 campaign slogan will be used against him should he seek re-election rather than the presidency in 1988.

These recriminations probably contain truth in some instances, and they were absolutely inevitable. Casting blame is a normal early reaction to trouble. But as quickly as possible we need to get beyond blame and deal with the future. For, although the closing of the Fore River Shipyard is a misfortune for many, it is also an opportunity for the human imagination. For Massachusetts, for Southeastern Massachusetts, and for the immediate Quincy area the closing can be a historic opportunity to sow the seeds of enterprise that will prosper on into the next century.

The sooner we get past recriminations the sooner we can begin to make this happen. A good historic analogy is the closing of the Watertown Arsenal, which was announced in 1968. There were despair and recriminations then, too. Some blamed Defense Secretary McNamara and his slide-rule-brained assistants. (What ever became of slide rules?) Others blamed the then raging anti-war movement. The truth probably was that the Arsenal at Watertown was doomed by changing times and military demands, and that the 1968 announcement could have been postponed but not avoided. The same is probably true today of the shipyard at Quincy.

But the analogy goes a step further. Recriminations didn't save the Watertown Arsenal, but the human spirit transformed it into something totally different. Today "Arsenal Mall" is one of the most truly beautiful shopping malls in the country. Many of the old buildings have been rehabilitated, and the aesthetic as well as the economic effect on the Watertown area is a net gain over the former Arsenal.

The opportunity that exists with respect to the Shipyard is similar, but much greater. The shipyard site has the potential of anchoring the regional economy for years to come. It has nearly everything such a site needs. By dint of its existence as a shipyard it is a deepwater port. It has a rail freight line, reasonable proximity to the interstate highway system and nearby rail rapid transit (The Red Line) that could be brought into the site. It is close to Boston's enormous talent pool and at the same time closer than Boston itself to the not inconsiderable talent pool that chooses to live on the South Shore.

Some effort probably will be made to save the shipyard itself and probably should. It is possible that a buyer can be found that is free of General Dynamics' history of wrongdoing, a history that may have contributed to the failure of the Quincy operation. But I have to think that the likelihood is that no such buyer will be found. General Dynamics, despite its troubles, retains the resources to stay in business in Quincy if it saw shipbuilding opportunities on the horizon. That it does not probably means that the best course of action for all concerned is to bury the shipbuilding past, and get on with creating a non-shipbuilding future.

What is needed is grand thinking on the part of business, government, environmentalists, and all other interested parties. The misfortune of the closing of the shipyard (it would cheapen the language to call it a "tragedy") should be seen as a splendid opportunity. It is a splendid opportunity for Gov. Dukakis who strongly favors joint business/government projects. It is a splendid opportunity for business in Southeastern Massachusetts. It is a splendid opportunity for environmentalists if they will bring themselves to imagine what this waterfront site might be.

It is, of course, not a splendid opportunity for those who are about to lose their jobs. For them the recent announcement by General Dyanmics is a body blow, the instant entrance into a life crisis. For them at this time optimistic notions such as what you are reading are probably sickening. But as we all have to do when we enter life crises, workers at the shipyard need to understand that when one door closes another usually opens, and the door that opens sometimes reveals a brighter future than that which lay behind the door that closed.

It is thus that I believe that if they, the newly unemployed, and the government, and the business community work together, by the mid 1990's the Shipyard can be transformed. It is not for a mere reporter to suggest what form that transformation ought to take.only that from shipyard workers to a governor to South Shore business leaders big and small, the reporter sees the talent all around him to make a transformation of that shipyard come to pass.

PATCHES — by Lois Martin

Aunt Lassie's recipe was no piece of cake

For the first time in days rain gave respite to unalterable heat. It had been an equally long time since I'd used the stove for anything other than a place to keep the tea kettle.

Furthermore there's this friend whom I'm preening for entry in the Marshfield Fair baked goods competition. He can handle it. He makes an inordinately moist cake already. So there's been this idea to arm him with the best recipe going for fair competition.

And this mutual friend has worn us out with the singing of praises about Aunt Lassie's cake. Through the years the cake has come to be called 'Death Cake,' a term I've found unpleasant and said so straight out.

It's called that simply because it's the death of people who eat it and can't stop themselves from doing so. Chocolate, naturally, it was brought to this friend's home by the immortal Aunt Lassie about whom I've come to know a great deal.

First thing to know is she's the late Aunt Lassie, all the more respect thereby deferred. And she had flair and style. She was, if I've come to understand correctly and Lord knows how I could have done otherwise with having heard about her unceasingly for at least a couple years, a generous woman, buxom and full bodied and with a spirit that was more than equal to the body which was used as a mere harbor for that incredible, untameable, and blooming soul.

Childless herself, she launched her love at the mere mention of her nieces, of which my friend was one, and then proceeded to lavish upon them everything that was available to her in worldly goods. That, bless her, was a lot.

So that over the years Aunt Lassie's arrival heralded bearing of precious gifts bestowed in glorious aura of pleasure for all. Such was the nature of the woman, the gifts, the growing up with an Aunt Lassie.

You understand then, that her cake was as rich as was she, as delectable in the arrival and the consumption. And has since her unwelcome death, served as part of the wondrous aunt's estate.

I have honored all this stuff, fed me by a friend, until I too am nearly as persuaded as she that Aunt Lassie was the hottest ticket to hit the earth since Ma Barker, and a far more socially astute one.

So you can see the importance of my other friend's having Aunt Lassie's cake for fair competition.

Since the aforementioned weather favored a turned oven late last week, I got my hands on Aunt Lassie's recipe and took to my kitchen.

By ultimate grace it held all the proscribed ingredients. My friend had already let it be known what her opinion would be of anyone who sank to the classlessness of someone who'd use any ingredient other than was mentioned.

Within moments I was absorbed in Aunt Lassie's cake. And beyond that I was enveloped in the heritage factor of the old girl and wanted like anything to do her justice. So to enrich the project I decided to bake Aunt Lassie's cake in my grandmother's time-honored cake pan. Today it would be called bundt. Back when Lelia Varney used it, it simply was a cake pan put into use all special occasions. Precisely.

I had a twinge of consternation with Aunt Lassie's recipe when I read what I viewed as too little butter for what would obviously be a rich as the devil cake. But who was I, after all, to toy with the ultra aunt.

Secured in Lelia Varney's cake pan, Lassie's cake was sent forth to the oven. That was unfortunate. Because my oven dial has had its problems. When it's off, it registers numbers it shouldn't. That sounds unclear. Let it be said more succinctly that turning my oven dial is to baking what Russian Roulette is to playing with guns. One never knows.

I certainly did not. I let'er cook, smelling the fine odor of a baking cake. ...But within a minute's time about 30 minutes later, I knew I smelled a familiar scent too late.

Burned. Aunt Lassie's cake in Lelia Varney's pan was scorched on its bottom. Ticked, heartbroken, self-flagellating, the works. And it was only an hour or so later that the friend to whom Lassie was aunt, stopped by to see her dear departed aunt's special creation.

New meaning was brought to indignation.

"You burned it," she said.

"It's dry," she said.

"You should never have used that pan," she said. Emotionally I could handle the first two remarks. The one about the pan I could not. That was my grandmother she was talking about. I said as much.

But I was ashamed and deservedly so. She ate some, cutting away at the top (destroying what character could have been salvaged) and remarked that the flavor brought back memories.

Were this not a scene difficult enough to overcome in friendship, the presence of store bought frosting nearby made it impossible.

She rightly accused me of planning to put that on Aunt Lassie's cake instead of making the good icing that was supposed to be used. I couldn't because I'd had no cream, I apologized, and since I'd burned the hide out of it anyway, what did it matter.

She continued consuming the palatable portion, but was visibly lowering the grade on the cake.

"Don't you ever," she said, "tell anyone that is Aunt Lassie's cake. If you do, I'll kill you."

The woman knows no struggle with subtlety.

Today's another day, right? The oven's got the same dial but the sun's shining and my sister loves chocolate cake enough, maybe, to eat a little of it when she gets here today.

Meanwhile there's the entry for the fair to be dealt with. I'll give that more consideration. Certainly one good option is for me to freeze the cake, whip it out the day of the competition and enter it lovingly ...in Aunt Lassie's name...for revenge of the humiliation I've had to endure baking the bloomin' thing.

FROM THE KITCHEN

By Rochelle Flynn

(Joan Pinkham has, so to speak, removed her apron for a week's vacation. Well deserved. And in her stead we offer a guest for the cuisine, Rochelle Flynn. She is the food columnist for Single Living Magazine, published by Mariner Newspapers.)

A quiche, according to the "New Larousse Gastronomique" is a tart that originated in Lorraine, France that is "always served as hors d'oeuvre and never for the sweet course."

We all know, however, that a quiche is also a filling, easily prepared main dish. Served with soup and/or salad, a quiche can be dressed up or down to suit your guests' or family's needs, and will serve 4-6 people, depending on what the quiche is served with. Of course, cut into tiny wedges, and served hot, warm or cold, a quiche is also a perfect snack with cocktails.

The pastry crust is the first item to prepare when making a quiche. If you insist on making your own, use a short-crust pastry recipe, but a frozen, unmolded pie crust will do the trick and make preparing a quiche much easier.

Line a quiche pan with a crust and bake in a 350 degree oven for 5-10 minutes, until the crust just turns brown. If you are worried about a soggy crust, brush the pastry with a little egg white and pop into the oven for an additional three mintues.

Another little trick is to strain your egg and cream mixture thorugh a screen colander. This is not necessary, but it does give the quiche a lighter texture.

Use your imagination when making a quiche. Experiment with vegetables, meats, spices and cheese. If you come across a recipe that calls for spinach and you prefer asparagus or endive, substitute. Like Italian food? Then try a quiche that has chopped seeded tomatoes, basil, oregano, garlic, mozzarella and salami. After all, being a little wild with your eggs won't hurt anybody.

The grandmother of all quiches is Quiche Lorraine. If you have never made a quiche, this is an easy one to start with, as it requires minimal preparation and has universally acceptable taste.

Line the prepared pie shell with 6-8 strips of crisply cooked bacon and 12 slices of Swiss cheese. Beat together 4 large eggs, 1 tablespoon flour, 1/2 teaspoon salt, 1/2 teaspoon dry mustard, 1/4 teaspoon cayenne pepper, 2 cups light cream and 1 1/2 teaspoons melted butter. A teaspoon of Worcestershire sauce and 3 tablespoons of grated Parmesan cheese may be added. Pour over the bacon and cheese. Also, 1/2 to 1 cup of grated cheese may be used instead of the slices, just add as much as you like.

Bake in a preheated oven set at 375 degrees for 30 minutes, or until a knife or toothpick inserted in the center comes out clean. The length of time needed to cook the quiche will vary with each oven, as some get hotter than others, so just keep checking after the initial 30 minutes.

For an asparagus quiche, slice 3/4 pound asparagus into 1 inch pieces and parboil for 3-5 minutes, or until just tender, and drain. Saute 1/4 cup chopped scallions. When the scallions are soft, toss the asparagus into the pan, coat with butter and then layer the vegetables on the bottom of a prepared pastry crust. Sprinkle 1/2-3/4 of a cup shredded cheese over the vegetables. Try a mild cheddar or Gruyere.

Combine 1 cup of half-and-half (cream) with two beaten eggs, 1/2 teaspoon salt, 1/4 teaspoon pepper, 1/4 teaspoon thyme. A dash of Worcestershire sauce can be added. Pour the egg mixture over the vegetable and sprinkle with paprika. Bake in a preheated oven set at 350 degrees for 30 minutes, or until a knife inserted in center comes out clean.

No one wants to do any heavy duty cooking on a hot summer night. So, when you finally get fed up with barbecues, serve a crab quiche with a spinach salad, precluded by a cold soup to your company. Make the salad and soup ahead of time, and pop the quiche into the oven when your company arrives.

Saute 1/3 cup thinly sliced celery with 1/4 cup finely chopped onion in butter until soft. Combine with 1/2 cup mayonnaise, 1/2 teaspoon salt, 2 beaten eggs, 1/4 cup milk, 2 tablespoons white wine, 1 cup shredded Gruyere cheese, 2 tablespoons flour, 1 1/2 cups flaked, cooked crab meat, 1 teaspoon Worcestershire sauce and 1/4 teaspoon Cayenne pepper. You can use canned crab meat, although fresh is better, and, if you desire, add a dash of garlic powder.

Pour into pastry shell and bake in a preheated oven set at 350 degrees for 45 mintues, or until a knife inserted into the center comes out clean.

If you really want to be fancy, make individual quiches for appetizers or a luncheon dish. Line tiny tart pans with pastry dough and brown in a 400 degree oven for about 5 mintues. beat together 2 eggs and 1 cup of half-and-half. add whatever seasonings you like: thyme, parsley, Worcestershire sauce, salt and pepper. Sprinkle shredded cheese and ham into the bottom of each tart and pour enough of the egg mixture into each tart until it just reaches the top. Sprinkle with paprika or parsley. Bake in a 375 degree oven for 12-15 minutes, or until a toothpick inserted in the middle comes our clean. Serve hot or cold.

Anyone dieting knows that cream and pastry crust are no-nos. So, when you are serving your family or guests a forbidden quiche, make yourself a more dietetic version of the same.

Beat together 2 eggs and 1/4 cup skim milk. Saute a few scallions (white part only) with 2 very finely chopped celery stalks in wine or vegetable spray. Be generous with your seasonings. Add a teaspoon of Worcestershire sauce, a dash of cayenne pepper, 1/4 teaspoon thyme salt, pepper and 1/2 teaspoon parsley.

Spray a small, non-stick baking dish or a ceramic ramekin with vegetable spray and place onions, celery, 1 ounce shredded cheese and 1 ounce shredded ham in the bottom of the dish. Cover with the egg mixture and bake at 325 degrees for 25-30 minutes, or until set and a knife inserted in center comes out clean. Be careful that you do not cook this too quickly or the edges will dry out before the center is done. To be safe, you can set the baking dish in a pan of water, but it may need to bake a little longer if you do this.

Striking a blow at medieval thinking

By Tom Henshaw

The Quincy Patriot Ledger last Saturday posed this question to the man in the street: "Would you resign if you were President Reagan and had just had cancer surgery?"

Fortunately, all six of those asked responded with a resounding "No!"

I say "fortunately" because it was a pretty dumb question to begin with and it was gratifying that those who answered recognized that fact even if the questioner didn't.

Cancer is a frightening word but it's not synonymous with the end or even the beginning of the end. For most of us, it means, "Hey, you're lucky. Now be careful."

I say "us" because I am one of them.

On July 17, 1984, I had the same identical operation that President Reagan had, with considerably less fanfare, of course.

Dr. Philip Landry at South Shore Hospital opened me up, took out about a foot and a half of intestine containing a malignant tumor, saw there was no more and sewed me up.

A week later I was home. Two days after that I was working a couple or four hours a day at home. No heavy lifting, of course. By August 15, I was back working fulltime.

Since then, I have covered innumerable governmental meetings and sporting events, started another novel (the first two didn't sell so don't look for them) and even switched jobs to one with a better future.

And no one has even suggested that I slow down, much less resign.

Now, I'm not saying that cancer is a walk in the sunshine.Some forms of cancer are devastating.But some are not. Let's not lump them all together as a great fright word synonymous with the end.

President Reagan and I had cancer. It was detected and removed. Presumably all of it. We don't have it any more. If we are careful, Ronnie and I, we probably have less chance of getting it again that you do.

To suggest that President Reagan resign . . . How medieval!

THE NO-COMPROMISE SOLUTION TO BUYING AN AUTOMOBILE.

When you lay out a substantial amount of money for an automobile, you should get what you want. Buying a car shouldn't be an exercise in making sacrifices.

Saab doesn't ask you to give up anything.

Superb handling and performance have made the Saab 900 one of Europe's most respected sports sedans. But that performance is delivered in return for little gas* and less fuss by a reliable two-liter engine. And unlike many other high-performance cars, the Saab is perfectly at home in the workaday world. Four adults can travel comfortably all day in a Saab, or the rear two seats can be folded flat to add extra space for cargo.

We'll be happy to tell you about a lot of other features that you won't have to give up when you buy a Saab.

SAAB
The most intelligent car ever built.

*Saab 900 5 speed EPA estimated mpg. Use estimated mpg for comparison only. Your mpg will vary with speed, trip length and weather. Actual highway mileage will probably be less.

Cohasset swimmer competes on national level

Even the choreography and costuming of the sport has changed over the past few years.

"Performances used to carry through a theme," Carol said. "I still like to develop one theme throughout a performance. It gets the audience more involved. I like to get a little more theatrical. Costuming now is very simple. The less you have to carry on you, the freer your movements can be."

When she performs, Annie wears only a simple blue suit and a stiff ribbon to hold her hair in a bun.

Although she frequently performs solo, she prefers team routines.

"I like solos, but they get me so nervous," she said. "It hasn't been so bad lately, though."

"The only reason she does solos is because we have no one to put her with," her mother explained. "It's difficult to find someone with as much dedication to the sport. You don't want to work an entire season with one partner, and then find yourself alone and unable to compete when the bigger meet at the end of the season comes along."

Both Annie and her mother like the atmosphere of the meets.

"It's a very friendly atmosphere," Carol said. "People have been very helpful.

"I think Annie's surprising people. A lot of the national judges had never known of our group before. Annie, as a soloist, did very well. Only 7 awards are given in each age group. Annie placed 7th out of 16 solos. Because she was unknown to the national judges, it surprised a lot of people."

Annie is a small girl, and her strength is surprising. To perform the synchronized figures, swimmers need good breath control, and a lot of endurance.

"Annie likes all sports," her mother said. "She competes at the Cohasset Yacht Club in a Sprite class, and she had done speed swimming until this year. She likes everything but basketball."

Annie practices in her backyard pool which is 44 feet long, and 10 1/2 feet deep, with a short shallow end.

"You've got to do synchro in a good, deep, five lane pool," Carol said. "California synchro swimmers are the best in the world. It's all out doors.

"I don't think Annie would be going to Arizona without me and I wouldn't be going without her."

Annie believes she can become as good as the California and Arizona swimmers during her Arizona stay.

"I just might be a couple of years older," she said. "I like [the sport] a lot. I want to go somewhere."

Firefighters want to know 'where is the bell?'

It's cropping up in places all around town.It's in advertisements and scrolled upon hats. People are wondering "Where is the bell?"

That's what some members of the Cohasset Fire Department are asking. And thus far, the answers haven't been plentiful.

Thursday, June 27, a brass and chrome-plated bell was allegedly taken from the storage area in the basement of the fire station. The bell was similar to those seen on the front right section of many fire trucks.

It wasn't that the monetary value of the bell was astronomical. By today's market, the unused bell was worth about $400 or more.

It was the sentimental worth of this adornment. According to Firefighter Leonard Davis, that bell belonged atop Engine 3 at the Beechwood station. The late Paul Grassie was assigned to that vehicle, and when he died July 4, 1975, that truck was parked at the central station ramp. The men rigged the ornament so that when the funeral procession traveled by, the bell on the unmanned truck was sounded.

Davis remembered the occasion as a solemn and fitting tribute to his friend. That's why he was so angered when he found that someone was trying to steal the bell.

"I don't care who took it. None of us care about that. I just want it back in the station where it belongs. It has a lot of sentimental value to me," he said this week.

The bell atop Engine 3 was at least 30 years old, and in mint condition. The value of the item was probably near $500, according to Davis.

The firefighter wants some answers as to why the bell was taken from the station basement. But more

It's up to developers to re-file Lily Pond subdivision

Although denied by the planning board last week, the developers of the proposed Lily Pond Estates subdivision have twenty days to make corrections to the plan.

The planning board officially listed 23 reasons why the 11-lot subdivision was rejected. That list was filed Tuesday with the town clerk. The developers, Edward Britt and Aaron Rosenberg, now have 20 days to resubmit a new plan or make corrections to the present plan.

According to Massachusetts General Law Section 81-U, "in the event of disapproval, the planning board shall state in detail" the reasons for rejection. An amended plan which conforms to the stated reasons and all rules and regulations will then be approved by the planning board.

Chairman Christine Bassett said she expects the developers will either refile the amended plan or submit a new project to the board within 20 days.

The board denied the plan last Wednesday night after consultant engineer John Modzelewski listed several ambiguities, contradictions and commented on the incompleteness of the plan. He recommended the board reject the plan.

Board members acknowledged their consultant's thorough review of the proposed subdivision.

Since the developers expressed interest in this property alongside Lily Pond, neighbors and town officials have expressed their opposition. Several neighbors attended the site plan hearings, objecting to the increased travel on King Street and the possible effect on the town's water supply at Lily Pond.

In addition, the water commission joined neighbors in protesting elimination of easements and rights-of-way into the property. The commission charged that the property took away the driveway access to their department, and was posed a health hazard by adding chemicals and pesticides to the ground water.

The commission will pursue the easement question in land court. They have also requested the town support taking the 36-acre lot by eminent domain, protecting it from any future development.

In his lengthy review of the proposed subdivision, engineer Modzelewski noted that he was unclear whether the town, the developers or the homeowner would be responsible for maintaining the drainage easement to individual retension ponds on the lots.

Tragedy hits town once again

Once again, the white interior of St. Anthony's Church was filled with tearful teenagers and mournful parents. And once again they watched in glazed silence as the white-draped coffin was escorted down the narrow aisle to take its place beside a sorrow-filled family.

Rev. John Keohane, celebrant of Tuesday's funeral Mass for Mark Delaney, mentioned the similarities between the three funerals he has presided over in the past year. Three young students from Cohasset High School have died this year, and this town will never be the same.

In contrast, Mark's funeral was held under a brilliant sun and hot temperatures. It should have been a time for sunbathing at Sandy Beach, or practicing for a swim meet at the town pool.

Mark, 16, was killed Saturday morning when the car he was driving struck a tree on South Main Street. A passenger, John T. Ryan, 20, of Woodland Road, is in poor condition in the Intensive Care Unit of South Shore Hospital with multiple injuries.

Another passenger, Kevin Leary, 17, of Holly Lane, was treated and released from the hospital.

According to police, the accident occurred about 3:15 a.m. when the car slammed into a tree south of the intersection of Beechwood Street and Stanton Road. Police said there were 177 feet of tire marks at Cohasset's week . . .

Committee vacancies

Selectmen are requesting applications for the following positions and committees.

There are two vacancies on the Straits Pond Management Committee and two vacancies on the Council on Aging.

Selectmen are seeking two fence viewers for the Beechwood and North Cohasset areas.

A veteran's agent is still needed, following the recent resignation of Gerard Keating.

Selectmen approve raise

Selectmen rejected the pay increase recommended for the assistant town accountant, opting for a less substantial increase.

Town Accountant Don Andrew two weeks ago recommended an increase for Mary Ann Barbuto to $7.87 per hour. As a junior accountant in that office, she was making $6.95 per hour and would have been eligible for a step raise September 1 to $7.18 per hour.

Andrew said he was recommending the two-step increase because of the "way the person works." He felt the larger increase would be fair compensation for her work in that office.

Selectmen rejected the recommendation Barbuto be paid according to the C-8, Step 3 schedule, and supported a salary of $7.66 per hour.

Museum valuation

According to local Realtor Juliette Guild, the vacant Independence Building on South Main Street "is functionally obsolete and if sold, the sale price would have to reflect the extensive repair and updating it would need to bring it up to code."

The Coastal Country Properties realtor explained to selectmen that the approximate value of the building is $60,000. She also suggested that if selectmen do sell the property, that certain restrictions be placed on its use.

Selectmen have requested opinions of value of the former Historical Society's Gown Museum from two local realtors. The building has been vacant for more than a year, and selectmen would like to sell the town-owned structure.

Built in 1850, the building has been used as a fire station, police station and finally, the gown museum. As of January 1, 1983, the land was assessed for $18,000 and the building was appraised at $22,600.

Guild noted in a letter to selectmen that there are severe water problems in the building, and that access into the structure is difficult. The building is constructed into a wall of ledge in the rear.

She also stated that "the property is unique and would appeal to a very limited market."

Health board approval

The Board of Health has approved the site of the proposed salt shed within Cedar Street Landfill. The board was requested to approve the location and construction of the shed's base.

The conditions attached to the approval include: an area must be continued outside the shed where salt might be spilled during delivery or loading; a small asphalt berm must be constructed around the base to help with drainage; and drainage must be run to a water-tight catch basin or some other means to help drainage on the site.

According to the board, the risk of contaminating wells in the area is great. The board will be doing random samplings of wells prior to the operation to obtain baseline data.

"Where is bell?"

importantly, he wants it back. "I'm driven with this thing," he said, explaining that the thought of someone stealing the bell is irrational.

He did note however, that such an item could be attractive to fire buffs who are eager to purchase firefighting memorabilia and would pay a substantial price.

Davis said that Group Four was on duty the day of June 27. A few firefighters were in the office when Chief Martin Dooley walked down into basement. He stayed there about a half hour, he said.

This is the bell when it was pushed out the fire station basement window. Later that night, it was taken.

A while later, the firefighters were talking with the chief in the station office. When Firefighter Davis walked outside "after a few words," he turned to the east side of the building.

"I saw the bell laying in the bushes outside the building and called two of the guys to come look. Capt. Robert Silvia then notified selectmen that the bell was taken from the basement, pushed through the basement window, and left laying in the bushes.

When the police chief was later notified of the incident, the firefighters were told nothing was officially stolen because it had not been taken from the property. The firefighters on the second shift were told of the incident, and ordered to leave the bell where it was

At 12 midnight when that shift ended, the bell was still in its resting place. But when the morning shift looked for it at 7 a.m., it was gone. "Now it was officially stolen," Davis remarked.

But according to Police Chief Joseph Kealey, there was and will be no investigation of the incident. He said there are insufficient facts to indicate the bell was actually stolen. "It looks to us like this is another problem within the fire department and we don't want to get involved in that," he stated.

A few days later, Executive Secretary Don Andrew handed down a directive that all town departments complete an inventory of their department.

The downstairs of the central fire station is a conglomeration of discarded and forgotten firefighting materials. Old tires, antique daily log books, and many small and large items have been crowded into a small congested area. The bell was stored in a locked cage in the basement. The firefighters do not have a key to the cage, Davis said.

According to a separate source within the department, the chief ordered a zerox copy of an inventory completed two years ago. That was the copy sent to the executive secretary, according to the chief's orders.

That inventory would therefore not show that a bell or any other items were missing from the department.

According to one source, a pair of antique leather firefighting helmets has also been taken from the basement, in addition to other items.

The Mariner was unsuccessful in our attempts to contact Chief Martin Dooley this week.

"I want to know why the police have not investigated this," Davis asked. "No one was ever questioned about the incident and nothing was ever done to get the bell back. That's all we want - to have the bell in the station."

Davis said he and the other firefighters will not give up their crusade to retrieve the bell. Whatever it takes, they would like nothing more than to have the bell back.

Although serious about the efforts being made by the firefighters to regain their possession, Davis wasn't completely devoid of humor this week.

"What do the Strawberry Parfait, J.J.'s and the fire station have in common?" he asked.

"They all have a take out window."

The Scrambler is coming.

The Scrambler will turn your dish into a $2,000 mistake.

They didn't believe it in California. They doubted reports that the most popular cable pay channels would scramble their signals. Instead, they listened to the dish antenna salesman. "It'll never happen," he said. Boy, was he wrong.

Last month, California dish owners turned to HBO and it was gone.

Now Showtime, Cinemax, and the other pay channels are set to scramble too. Before you know it, The Scrambler will be here.

Let's face it, if you've got a dish and The Scrambler comes, what have you got? On the other hand, if you've got American Cablesystems and The Scrambler comes, you've still got top quality programs and excellent service. And no $2,000 dinosaur sitting in your yard.

Committee to obtain fire chief examination

With the support of the local firefighters, selectmen are planning to request a budget transfer of $1000 for the Fire Chief Search Committee to conduct an assessment examination of the top qualifying candidates.

The committee is in the midst of soliciting applicants for the position of Cohasset Fire Chief. Committee Chairman Stephen Bobo predicted they will receive a total of nine candidates, based on the number of persons who have contacted the committee after the position was advertised.

In a discussion with selectmen Monday night, Bobo wondered if the salary should be increased from the low $30,000 category to the mid-to-high range. If committee members publicly stated that the salary would be hiked, more candidates would come forward, he said.

Selectmen responded that the salary could not be increased without approval from town meeting. They expect a special town meeting will be held sometime in October or November.

In the meantime, selectmen said they would request a $1000 budget transfer from the advisory committee to pay the costs of administering a comprehensive examination of the top job applicants.

One examiner has already approached Chairman Bobo, stating it would cost $800 to administer the exam along with three assistants. The need to select an impartial and "impeccably qualified" candidate is extremely important, he said, so there could be no question of the exam's credibility, nor the persons administering the test.

Firefighter Leonard Davis said the "general feeling" of the entire department is that the exam is a solid concept. "I like the idea of an exam. A man has to pass an exam to be captain and I'm aware if a man doesn't deserve to be captain, I don't want him as chief. If the man passed this exam, he'd be a professional," he told selectmen.

The firefighter also noted that the common practice in Cohasset was to pay the fire chief 1.8 times the salary of the premium firefighter's wage. Although it was once mandated, it is no longer a provision of the state. However, Davis said the concept is still practiced, keeping the salary within the $30,000 range.

Bobo said his committee completed a survey of surrounding towns, and found that most chiefs are paid higher than in Cohasset. Executive Secretary Don Andrew said his study, including comparably-sized towns, resulted in a salary scale similar to Cohasset's.

Bobo noted that although he has received "some fine requests" for job applications, the committee would attempt to solicite more for review.

In regard to the exam, Bobo explained that the committee would not see the actual test questions until after it was administered. Basically, he said, there would be a question regarding fire management, a simulated interview between a chief and a 'dissatisfied' firefighter, and a fire-fighting problem related specifically to a Cohasset neighborhood.

Once the test is administered to the top qualifying candidates, the administrator will give the committee the scores on a numerical basis in addition to his personal comments.

The committee's schedule will be to review the applications for two weeks, with a goal to administer the exam by the first of September.

Bobo noted that in the questionnaire to be answered by the job applicants, there is a request to write out their existing department's policy on job reinstatement. This would resolve whether other communities allow an ex-employee to return to his previous job if he does not succeed during an employment trial period. Such written policies would allow Cohasset selectmen to review various regulations, in order to implement such rules in the future.

Selectmen explained the town previously accepted a policy which states that if two candidates are equally qualified for a position, the local candidate be given preference. Selectman Mary Jane McArthur noted that if two applicants are deemed equally qualified for the job, the local applicant will be favored.

Selectmen set to discuss varied issues

Selectmen have scheduled a planning meeting with town employees and committee members next Wednesday night, August 15.

At Monday night's meeting selectmen reviewed about 20 items they plan to discuss at next week's session. Selectman Cliff Mitman explained that specific issues cannot be discussed in minute detail because of the time constraints of one meeting. He suggested that several broad areas be discussed, without looking for a conclusion to any one issue.

He said he would like to discuss the position of Executive Secretary/Town Accountant and ask Don Andrews how the new position is functioning. He also plans to request more financial reporting from the town's accountant's office.

Andrew, who has been the town's Acting Executive Secretary and Town Accountant, said he plans to issue a status report on the position within 90 days of his employment.

Selectman Diane Sullivan would like to discuss several subjects, primarily the utilization of user fees for many town services and a review of all town permit fees.

The user fees would affect the ambulance, she noted, and would include a more sophisticated system to retrieve payments of bills.

Although it is likely under the jurisdiction of the school department, Sullivan suggested that students participating in competitive, extra curricula activities be charged a user fee. That would reduce some of the costs borne by all taxpayers, some of whom don't have children in the system. The extra revenue could be set aside for special maintenance and building projects, she said.

Among the other subjects she would like to have

Developers turn to change plan

The systems need maintenance, he said, and the maintenance procedure must be specified.

A main concern, he noted, was the inconclusive evidence provided by IEP engineers regarding the effects of the development on the town's water supply. "I feel we would like to know in engineering certainty what to expect on our water supply. I would like a clearly-stated opinion on what can be expected on the impact of the water supply," he told the developers.

The developers submitted estimations on the effect nitrates draining from the development might have on the water supply. The developer's engineer Michael Beck, developed numbers regarding the effects fertilizers would have on the water supply site.

He said normal nitrate runoff would result in an average of .074 miligrams per liter of water during a 12-month period. During a storm, he explained, the runoff would be increased and the nitrates draining into the water would double.

In all cases, Breck stated, the nitrate runoff into the water supply would be within the state allowable standards which permits 10 miligrams per liter of water.

The engineer explained he could not estimate the effect of a "catastrophic event" upon the town's water supply. It is beyond the control of the developer if gas or oil is leaked onto an individual lot, Breck commented, adding, "that issue should not be used against us."

Another of Modzelewski's concerns regarded the installation of a device within the detention ponds to control the drainage. A slide gate would be suitable to shut off the pond in the event of an oil, or chemical spill.

The planning board members unanimously agreed to deny the plan submitted by the developers. Member Dan Cotton said he agreed with their consultant Modzelewski and rejected the plan for its lack of information. Chairman Bassett also termed the plan incomplete. "It was not deliberate, but these drawings are incomplete. I agree with our engineer that the plans are filled with ambiguities, incompleteness and contradictions," she said.

Selectmen set to discuss varied issues

all town departments zero-base their budgets, and prioritize a 'wish list' for selectmen during budget reviews. Selectman Mary Jane McArthur noted that selectmen, the advisory committee and capital outlay committee should sit down together to implement strict budget guidelines.

Sullivan also suggested that the town utilize college interns. They could assist study committees with long range planning, in addition to helping out with the clerical work in town departments.

An update of the sewer issue and the impending appeal is of prime consideration, she noted. Selectmen are planning to meet with the sewer commission next Monday night to discuss the status of that appeal to the federal Environmental Protection Agency.

Sullivan also suggested that selectmen ensure all town departments which should be self-sustaining, such as the planning and zoning boards, the library, harbor, health and cemetery departments, are functioning in that manner.

Selectman Mary Jane McArthur said she would like to discuss the development of a yearly calendar for selectmen in which different issues would be indicated for discussion or review. Touring all town buildings would be one item to be included onto the calendar, she said.

McArthur also noted the town must look to long range planning. Selectman Frank England concurred, saying a committee could be created to establish a five-to-ten-year plan for the town.

Selectman McArthur agreed, and said the town also needs to develop a handbook for all town committee members and employees. All rules, regulations, and legislation affecting them could be included into this one source, she suggested.

Selectman Rocco Laugelle said his main concern was increasing the base wages of town employees. "We've got to bring them up to a decent wage," he said. Selectmen agreed, but added that a proper evaluation and job classification system must be implemented before wages are increased.

Chiropractic for HEALTH

by Dr. Kevin M. Neill, Chiropractic Physician
OUT WHERE?

When someone describes to you that his back "went out," he is not accurately portraying reality. It is true that, under certain conditions, one may hear a cracking sound in one's spine. That sound is the same as one that is heard when one's knuckles are cracked. There is a nitrogen solution under pressure in the joints of the fingers as well as in the spinal joints. A sudden pull on the finger will decrease the pressure on the joint. This causes the nitrogen to come out of solution and temporarily turn from a liquid to a gas, creating a popping sound. The act of cracking one's knuckles may not be pleasant but it is not harmful. Equally true, people do not "throw their back out."

The only thing to really throw out is the old-fashioned idea that various aches and pains must be endured for a lifetime. More and more people are happy discovering that chiropractic exams address such difficulties providing a route to the source of such discomfort. By application of chiropractic techniques, points of interference can be alleviated and oftentimes years of painful existence become a thing of the past. Call the COHASSET CHIROPRACTIC OFFICE, 760 Chief Justice Cushing Hy., Suite 12, today. Our personal concern is your health. Therefore, we accept only those patients we sincerely feel we can help. Tel. 383-1211, 1214. Daily by appt.

ZBA reviews Art Center permit plans

Architectural plans for a new South Shore Art Center, to be built at 115 Ripley Road, were shown at the Zoning Board of Appeals (ZBA) meeting last week. Approximately 50 supporters of the Art Center turned out for the public hearing and submitted to the board a petition urging approval of the plans.

The present quarters, located down the street at 103 Ripley Road, have become too cramped in recent years. Attorney Roberta Sawyer, who presented the plans to the ZBA, said that the ceilings in the upper rooms are too low to set up an easel. Last month the Art Center bought the property at 115 Ripley Road where Tantillo's Auto Body Shop is now. The non-profit educational institution has been located at various spots in the village for the past 30 years.

The property at 115 Ripley Road measures 7317 square feet in size and is one unit of a five-unit condominium association. The proposed building would occupy 4572 square feet or 62 percent of the lot.

A plexiglass encased model of the plan was brought by architect Dan Bradford, and showed a two story contemporary styled wood building with a brick patio at the front door which will face on Pleasant Street.

To excute the proposal the Art Center must apply for and receive three special permits from the ZBA. One of the permits deals with the floodplain and can be granted on the condition that the new building does not increase the amount of impervious ground on the lot right now. The Conservation Commission has required the brick patio be set in sand for proper drainage.

The art center must also get a permit for a non-conforming building to be placed on a conforming lot for an unallowed use. The applicant must prove the new building will not be a substantial detriment to the environment.

The third special permit, and potentially the most troublesome, is for the discharge of pollutants from the facility into the town sewer system. Sawyer said the question of pollutant loading "is hard to analyze."

She predicted the facility will have a positive impact on the sewer system and the town water supply. Although toilets and sinks will increase in number, water conservation devices will decrease their sewer load by 2/3, said Sawyer. The art center will install a photo lab neutralization process that will render photographic chemicals safe before they are dumped into the system.

Sawyer noted the danger of hazardous waste getting into the town's water supply is more of a threat now with Tantillo's Auto Body on the premises. The property is littered with car wrecks, oil cans, tires and other materials that pollute the environment via precipitation runoff.

Sawyer pledged the art center's proposal will clean up the mess and discharge pollutants safely into the sewer system. She said she and her client have the ability to work with the water division control to achieve a satisfactory solution.

Supporting the proposal was Burk F. Ketchum of 29 Fernway. Ketchum, a professional town planner, noted the proposal would be beneficial to the village environment and the community.

Lee Palmiter, owner of Cohasset Cycle Sports and an abutter to the property, said the proposal represents the type of planning that needs to be done as the village matures. Palmiter has also planned to expand on his property and has used the plans for the art center in the drawing up of his own plans

Because of the art center's non-profit status, it will have to withdraw from the condominium association. This is desired by the Board of Directors because they want total control over their property and not be subject to the rules of the condominium association's governing board. Joseph Rosano, member of the condominium association, supported the art center's withdrawal and said it would have little impact on the association.

The only opposition to the plan came from the planning board which noted the architecture of the plan should be more sensitive to its environs. The non-profit status of the art center does not require the site review come before the Planning Board for approval. However, the ZBA is waiting for town counsel to confirm this before closing the hearing. Neither the board of health nor the conservation commission noted any objections.

The ZBA is holding the hearing on the plan open until it hears from town counsel, the Department of Environmental Quality Engineering, and the planning board's decision on Palmiter's plans for the cycle shop.

Cohasset mourns another victim

the accident scene. The three youths were not wearing seat belts, as far as the police have determined.

According to Police Chief Joseph Kealey, there were empty beer containers in the car. It has not been determined if the youths were drinking that night.

His friends throughout the community remember Mark as the "All-American" boy. He was handsome, fun, thoughtful and "a genuinely nice person," according to Melissa Barcomb, a former swim team member. She said everyone at the town pool, where Mark and his brother Greg, 13, competed in swim meets, is shocked by the death of this popular Cohasset teen.

"He was one of the nicest boys you could ever meet," Barcomb said this week. "He was a truly genuine person."

High school health educator Mike Gill never taught Mark in any classes, but he knew him from the swim center. Mark and his brother, and mother Ginny, were fixtures at the center.

'I talked to him a bit on Friday," the swim center manager said. "when we beat Scituate Yacht Club. From everything I knew and heard about Mark, he was a great kid. "

Gill said the reaction of his close friends on the swim team could only be described as shock. "Why Mark?" is what they are asking. He was such an All-American kid, the best. Why him?

"I don't know what to say. It's one of those tragic things that happens, no matter how hard we work to prevent them," he added.

In his eulogy Tuesday morning, Rev. Keohane noted that "death is very sad, particularly when one dies before his time, when he is very young."

He urged the congregation "not to drown in seas of sadness," because their faith has lead them to believe Mark has continued his journey through life.

"Mark is going forth from us. His life has not ended. His life has changed, but death is not a wall. Death is a door. This we believe and take comfort in knowing, that now Mark is not in our presence but in the presence of Christ," he said.

"Mark's soul has been taken to the Lord on the wings of angels, on the wings of eagles," Rev. Keohane stated.

The celebrant noted that the greatest emotion we can feel is compassion for others, to recognize, see and put an end to the sadness of another. He urged Mark's many friends to show compassion for his family.

"We are at our best when people are trying to console others, when we enter into another's feelings. Compassion is the greatest emotion," Rev. Keohane explained.

"Mark's humor and mannerisms will be missed,' he continued. "As we leave Mark today, what consolation can we have, except to know that Christ suffered and knew sadness and death.

"God loves us with an everlasting love, so we console ourselves with the life of Christ," the celebrant stated.

Rev. Keohane noted, "the town is so sad about these tragic deaths. But we have hope in the Lord. I have heard a lot about Mark. He was a good kid. I am so pleased that we have come here to show our support for his family, and we ask the Lord to refresh us in our burden as we present Mark to the Lord."

At the conclusion of the Mass, as Mark's body was escorted from the sun-filled church, a favorite song sounded over the public address system. He was buried at Woodside Cemetery.

Mark was recently elected to the high school Student Council. He was a member of the class of 1986.

Donations in his memory may be made toward a Cohasset High School Scholarship for a member of his class. Contributions should be sent to the Pilgrim Cooperative Bank in Cohasset.

☐Amy Lee Duncombe of Cohasset will enter Williams College this September as a member of the Class of 1989.

Duncombe, a 1985 graduate of Cohasset High School, is the daughter of John and Suzanne Duncombe of 2 Sheldon Road.

☐Good luck to Bill Lean and Robbie Jackson of Cohasset, Scott and Brian Lavoie of Scituate, Mike Chevery of Marshfield and Larry Poe of Washington, D.C. These six sea cadets were selected to be a six man sailing team to represent the USA in an International Sailing Regatta in Canada. The Naval Sea Cadet Corps of the United States selected these six sailors from their 77,000 members to compete against cadets from Canada, Britain, Sweden, The Netherlands, Belgium, West Germany and Australia. The regattas will be hosted by the Canadian government and held throughout Canada to celebrate the International Year of Youth. Bill, Robbie, Scott, Brian, Mike and Larry left Andrews Air Force Base on July 19 for Ottawa, Ontario, where they met the European cadets. On July 21 they all flew to Winnipeg, Manitoba, to meet the Austrialian cadets for the first of four International Regattas. The second regatta was held in Vancover, B.C., July 26-28; the third regatta was in Kingston, Ontario, on Aug. 1-3, and the fourth regatta was in Ste.-Angel-de-Laval, Quebec, on Aug. 5-7. Good luck to all of you, and be sure to let us know the outcome of all of your efforts!

☐Boy, is there news from the Brady family! Mike Brady, to be exact. Mike, a senior at Virginia Tech, and known to many Cohassetites as their tennis teacher, has certainly made the news after winning a recent competition. Mike and Mike Shapario (from Florida) entered their project on zinc and aluminum in a contest sponsored by the International Metallographic Symposium and they came in first in the United States! The contest was open to all seniors everywhere that are in Material Engineering, and there were 83 entries. The winner of the American Society of Metals was won by Mike, and he came in second internationally! Entrants from all over the world, and Cohasset's own has his project come in first! Of course, Mom and Dad, John and Nancy, are busting their buttons they are so proud, and well they should be. We all are, Mike. Congratulations!

☐And congratulations go to Dave Place, our former town moderator. He has been named to the Board of Directors of Merchants Cooperative Bank of Boston.

☐Rita Durkin sure is one happy grandmother — She finally got to babysit for her grandson, and he is the best baby she has ever encountered! Mom and Dad tend to agree with her, so everyone is happy!

☐Good luck to James Dillon and David MacDonald, two of the first 1985 CHS grads to begin either school or career life last week. And to all of the rest as they begin their "adult life" may you achieve all that you dream for and then some!

☐The selectmen are still looking for a committee to arrange an exchange between Cohasset and Souppes-Sur-Loing. Sounds like a grand idea that they have come up with, our students and residents going back and forth between the two communities. Anyone that is interested in "leading the charge" from Cohasset, contact Selectman Cliff Mitman at 383-9766.

☐Sunday is the fundraiser sponsored by the League of Women Voters — a lobster bake will be held at the First Parish House, and a silent auction on many items will also take place. The admission will be $35 and includes lobsters, steamers, clam chowder, etc. Yummy! Call Debbie Cook (383-6313) or Mary Larson (383-0775), for more information and/or reservations.

☐If you see Grace Silvia smiling even more than usual, it is for a good reason. She won a nifty trophy for her bowling score, and a key chain with her name and number on it. Good work, Grace!

☐Mr. and Mrs. Leo P. Sullivan of Hingham recently celebrated their 45th wedding anniversary at a surprise poolside party given by their children. The celebration was held at the home of their daughter and son-in-law, Nancy and Fred Emde of Cohasset.

The Sullivans were married July 14, 1940, in Boston. In addition to being the parents of Nancy Emde, they are also the parents of Dr. Albert L. Sullivan of Cohasset.

The Sullivans are also the grandparents of Denise, Chris, Peter and Ian Sullivan, and Grant Emde, all of Cohasset.

Over 120 people attended the party, including some old and dear friends from Ohio and New York. Mr. Sullivan serves as president of the Suffolk Mortgage Company in Boston. His hobbies include golf and fishing. Mrs. Sullivan's activities include gardening, exercise and walking.

The Sullivans have lived in Hingham for the last 31 years.

We have memories

Three tragic deaths in one year is too many. Our town has been scarred by these senseless deaths. Our children have been marked by the passing of their friends. Parents have stood by, watching their young and offering a compassionate embrace.

We will survive this latest tragedy, as we have the others. But with each passing, we have lost much. Three beautiful, bright and loving children are gone from us for no understandable reason.

Together we have mourned their passing and attempted in our own way to gain strength from brief friendships. They were our blessing in Cohasset, and they must become our source of strength in the future.

They are gone from us now. We must take comfort and receive our strength from the days we spent with them. We will remember their constant laughter, their silly jokes, their serious thoughts, their fights that lasted a few hours, their compassion for others.

No longer we will have days to giggle together, to sit with them and talk. No more conversations on the telephone. They'll be no more trips to the mall, a drive to the movie.

What we have will last us our lifetime. We have strong memories of the best their lives offered us. It doesn't matter - five, ten, twenty years into the future. Desiree, Seanna and Mark will be alive within our dreams and memories.

And they will be forever young. As we grow old and frail, they will stay the same. We will see them as they were, young, vivacious, active.

Death is a most difficult thing to accept. We are not the same as the day before our friends passed away. Hang onto the memories that recall those cherished moments you spent with them. That will guide you through this time of tragedy.

Yes, we have been scarred by the deaths of our friends. But allow it to heal, and we will experience the future with more insight, wisdom and compassion. We have our lives to live, filled with unknown accomplishments and wonderful memories.

Mr. Megabucks

The week wouldn't be complete without saying our sincere congratulations to Mr. Megabucks (aka Postmaster Edward Fonseca). Now that he's $2.5 million richer, we bet he receives a lot of these messages.

We hope our postmaster has a great time with his money, his new car and anything else he cares to purchase. He sounds as if he's going to have a lot of fun. That's the way to go!

Stop by the post office and say hi to the postmaster. He's a great guy who really doesn't mind all the attention. He's got to get used to all the fussing and joking going around,and we bet he's enjoying every minute of it.

Plot your course by the stars

By Claire McDonough

During the steamy summer months, life seems to be a bit slower - an excellent time to reassess. Where have we been? What are we doing now? Where are we headed?

Since most of us have a pretty good idea where we've been, and only the most dense among us don't know what we're doing at the moment, it seems a fairly good idea to concentrate on what the future holds.

According to Madame Zolar, who granted me an audience in her chic little ashram on Third Cliff, it holds plenty.

If you would be well-prepared for the months ahead, read Madame's words of counsel for the astrologically unaware.

ARIES (March 21 - April 19): Such a month! With the Sun trining your Sun, what could go wrong? Right? You will be able to push others around, contradict authorities, and generally do as you please. It is to be hoped for all our sakes, that you have no connections with the Department of Defense.

TAURUS (April 20 - May 20): Summer is a wonderful time for Taureans, except those employed by the Bank of Boston. If you are in the latter category, consider an extended vacation in a country with whom we don't have an extradition treaty.

GEMINI (May 21 - June 20): The Gemini twins, as you know, are Castor and Pollux. Try to avoid taking either on an empty stomach. As a whole, the month should go well. Everyone will be so busy watching Leos that Geminis will get away with murder. Consider selling detergent to your Taurean friends who work for the Bank of Boston.

CANCER (June 21 - July 22): Not a good time to start a diet. Summer brings so many tempting delicacies that the only way to control the Cancerian appetite is to weld your refrigerator shut. (One possible alternative is to stock it only with food you absolutely hate.)

LEO (July 23 - August 22): This is clearly your month. Your desire for fame will be satisfied beyond your wildest imaginings. This may later prove embarrassing if your business associates read the local police log.

VIRGO (Aug. 23 - Sept. 22): Congratulations! Natives of other signs will be so ennervated by the summer heat that they will happily let you clean out their closets and bureau drawers. Not only will you have the opportunity to neaten your friends' belongings, you will also be able to point out what irresponsible slobs they are.

LIBRA (Sept. 23 - Oct. 23): Not a very good month for Librans. You will be invited to 27 weddings, and none of them will be yours. Smile and bring wedding presents. They will be reciprocated the next time you get married.

SCORPIO (Oct. 24 - Nov. 22): A great time to further your political career. Since most legislative bodies are not in session during the summer months, you can hold a press conference while your colleagues are on vacation and take credit for everything they've done. By the time they come home and refute you, it'll be old news and no one will be interested. Just don't leave your notes where anyone on the Boston School Committee will find them.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 23 - Dec. 21): Get a Virgo to clean out your closets and bureau drawers. If you turn the MTV up loud enough, you won't hear her telling you what an irresponsible slob you are.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22 - Jan. 19): Good time for back-stabbing and clawing your way to the top. (See Scorpio). If marriage to the boss' daughter is part of your scheme, expect a handsome present from a Libra.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20 - Feb. 19): Another good month for you to be zany and unpredictable. Your name will be coupled with that of a prominent Leo. Regrettably, the coupling will occur in the police log.

PISCES (Feb. 20 - March 30): The summer will be one of your less enjoyable seasons. Nothing bad will happen, and you will have no excuse to cry, complain, or have hurt feelings. Hope for better news in the spring.

NOTE TO ALL SIGNS: Please ignore advice from an irresponsible sun sign astrologer who will try to hoodwink you. If you believe anything she tells you, she also has a Taurean friend who would like to invest your money for you.

A great club

To the Editor:

We were very grateful to read in the Cohasset Mariner of Thursday, July 25, the article on the Cohasset Sailing Club by Lisa Shumaker. Over the past 25 years perhaps many people have taken part in the lessons, activities, etc., without realizing from such a small beginning the Club has grown. It is regrettable that no mention was made of the tremendous help, financial, organizational and legal, that the then-members of the Cohasset Yacht Club gave to "the new kid on the block." There is no way to mention them all without inadvertantly missing at least one but especial note should be made of Bruce McLean, who was then and is still an active member of the Board of Trustees.

Thank you again for such a fine article.

Sincerely,
Gerard and Katherine Stanton

Marshfield and Cohasset share winner

Megabucks came home to Marshfield Saturday night when one of its own won $2,572,820.

That translates to $96,480 for 20 years for Edward Fonseca, 42, of Woodhaven Street. And it also meant that overnight the Cohasset postmaster found himself test driving a maroon Mercedes Sunday afternoon.

For those of us kept in suspense awaiting the word, the answer is yes. Postmaster Edward Fonseca purchased the Mercedes Benz.

After driving the car Sunday afternoon, Fonseca decided "what the heck," and bought it. It was expected to be delivered Wednesday or Thursday.

"It's not often you come this way, so I decided to buy it now," he said. The postmaster added that since he learned of his new-found riches, he has descended from Cloud Nine.

He began his postal career in Cohasset in 1968 and stayed here until 1972. He was transferred to Brant Rock and later to Boston. He returned to Cohasset in 1982 when he was named postmaster.

He has no plans to leave his job. In fact he hopes to advance his career with more promotions in the future.

A lot of his friends in Cohasset have come up to the Ripley Road office to share their best wishes. "No one has asked for a loan. . . yet," he said. "Maybe some people don't know how to approach me. And I don't know if anyone would be serious about asking for a loan."

Throughout the Cohasset Post Office, jokes have been flowing the past few days. "We're having a lot of fun with this," Fonseca continued. "I'll just take it one day at a time. But for now, it's a lot of fun."

Fonseca played his same old numbers at Hubbard's Cupboard Saturday about 5 p.m. That was 8-10-11-14-22-29, the birthdates of his son and daughter, the wrong one for his mother Mary and the right one for his late poodle, "Sherry".

All told, those figures were winners and after "Butch" Fonseca got home to the bank from Braintree with his money Monday, he headed back to Hubbard's Cupboard where Richard Khoury and Bryan Doyle chatted with the man who bought the ticket that made him a millionaire and brought the convenience store $15,000 as a bonus.

"Don't go in there," said a grinning man leaving the store Monday, "there's a millionaire in there."

Marshfield embraced its closeness to a top notch winner. The $2.5 million goes to a man who graduated from MHS in the Class of 1960. Back then he was lauded as a top notch athlete. And since that time he's stayed close to home, raising Denise and Butch, 21 and 18, his children. He lives with his parents Edward and Mary Fonseca on Woodhaven Street. He is, by the by, single.

Fonseca says he checked the numbers about midnight Saturday and he knew they looked good but he was actually checking those from Wednesday. He plays the same ones all the time. So he ran out to the car to make sure he'd stayed with the birthdays, as he remembers them.

Sure enough, he was a winner.

Sunday there was a game of golf to be played at Green Harbor Golf Club and then there was a Mercedes to check over. But he was still reportedly calm when he called Joe Cerilli, a supervisor for Fonseca in the Cohasset office.

"Do me a favor, will you," said Fonseca to Cerilli.

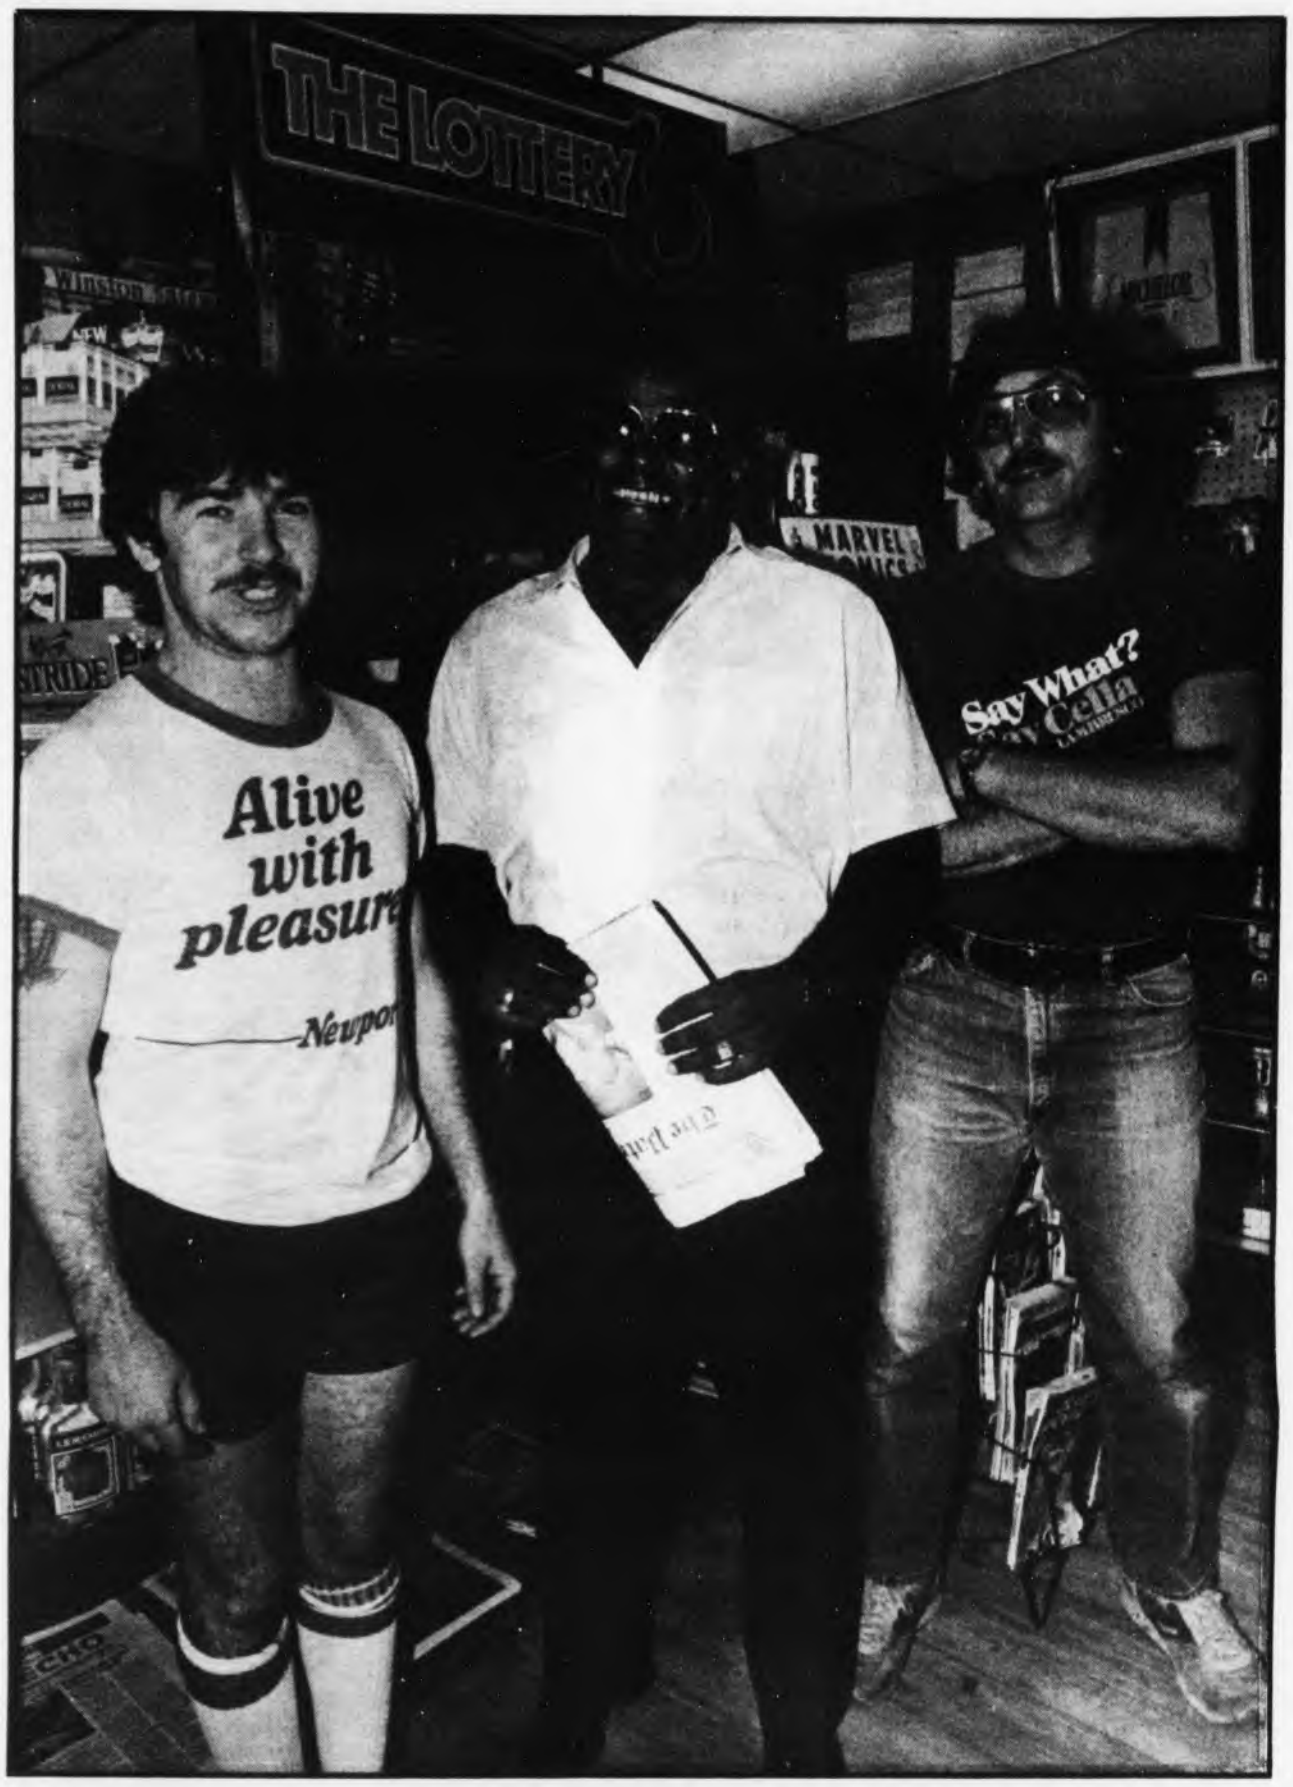
"Sure," said Cerilli.

"Listen, work for me tomorrow, will ya, because I gotta go get my money from Braintree. I won Megabucks," said Fonseca.

"Get serious," said Cerilli.

Dave Ellis of the Lottery headquarters in Braintree said Fonseca's check was minus the 25 percent that went for federal (20 percent) and state (five percent) taxes.

Monday evening he was to dine with his brother Ben Silva of Marshfield who promised to open a Dom Perignon which he told Fonseca he'd have to replace.



Dick Khoury, owner of Hubbard's Cupboard, said when he'd talked with Fonseca, the winner had jested, "Wanna buy a car?" Khoury told him, without necessarily jesting, that Fonseca should give it to him.

Monday the millionaire was driving an Olds Toronado, two years old. But he was headed back to work this week. He won't be vanquishing all work and home habits. He used to be postmaster in Brant Rock before he went to Cohasset. And now his son is an employee of the post office while his daughter is a college student.

Marshfield made the most of its Megabucks millionaire, tickled to have a winner in its midst.

"Look," quipped one young single woman late Monday, "There's a picture of my fiance in the paper . . . "

Edward (Butch) Fonseca was holding up well, handling the new found fortune and the friendly hometown bantering with equal ease.

Take a guess, just one, which of the men above is Marshfield's newest millionaire. The hint is: You may have spotted him at the No. Scituate Post Office. Featured in the center with the broadest smile is Edward (Butch) Fonseca, winner of Megabucks $2.5 million, a man looking for a Mercedes and a financial advisor. With him are Hubbard's Cupboard owners Bryan Doyle and Dick Khary, sellers of the lucky ticket. (Photo by Carol McCann)

Rotary mails local directory this week

The twenty-second annual issue of the Cohasset Rotary Club Telephone Directory and Buyers Guide will be distributed by mail this week.

Revenue from the book is the major fund-raising source for the club's scholarhsip program, through which $12,000 was granted to graduates of the Class of 1985 of Cohasset High School.

This year's publication is the largest yet and contains 120 pages of advertising messages from the business and professional community as well as messages from community service organizations and a page of emergency numbers sponsored by the Council on Aging and the Social Service League.

New this year is a page listing all of the local churches and their worship services and also a page to jot down frequently-called numbers.

Every effort has been made to mail a copy of the directory to every Cohasset household by using the town voting list. Homes which may have been missed may receive a copy by dropping a note to Rotary Club of Cohasset, P.O. Box 36, Cohasset, Mass. 02025 or by picking up a copy at Nobles Camera Shop, Cohasset Colonial Pharmacy or Cohasset Harbor Liquors.

Deadline for news copy is Tuesday at 9:30 A.M. at Cohasset News

Editorial wrong!

To the Editor:

Your editorial incorrectly accuses "a former board member" of requesting a decision from D.E.Q.E. Not so. It was the Board that requested the decision, and it was the Board that provided the material to D.E.Q.E. Of course, it suits the DeSantis crowd to blame the problem on the former Board member. She was a well known proponent of doing a proper sewerage job rather than the inadequate Ward plan, and misrepresentation is nothing new to the "alternatives" crowd.

Wish the Mariner would stop being a party to it.

Wood/Giannaros

Mr. & Mrs. Wood, III

The Annunciation Greek Orthodox Church of Brockton was the setting for the recent marriage of Miss Deborah E. Giannaros and Mr. Frederic H. Wood, III. A traditional double ring ceremony was performed by the Rev. John Kiramarios.

The bride is the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. E. Charles Giannaros of Brockton. Parents of the groom are Mr. and Mrs. Frederic H. Wood, Jr. of 50 Margin Street, Cohasset, Mass.

Given in marriage by her father, the bride wore a gown of white silk organza featuring off the shoulder puffed sleeves, a natural waist and a full skirt ending in a cathedral train. The bodice, sleeves and hem line were accented with venetian lace and seed pearls. A matching coronet of silk flowers and pearls held her two-tiered illusion veil. She carried a cascade arrangement of pink rubrum lilies, white stephanotis freesia and baby's breath.

Stephanie Giannaros attended her sister as maid of honor. She wore an off the shoulder pink moire taffeta gown and carried a semi-cascade bouquet of pink sweetheart roses with accents of white.

Similarly attired were the bridesmaids, Nancy Ann Wood of Eustis, Fla., sister of the groom; Emily Wood of Rockledge, Fla., sister in law of the groom; Nicole Giannaros, cousin of the bride, and Mary Ann Kotsiopoulos. The flower girl was Tatiana Liongos-Webb.

Best man for the couple was Mark Wood, of Rockledge, Fla., brother of the groom. Ushers were the bride's brother, Nicholas Ginannaros and her cousin, Dr. John Carabatsos, along with the groom's cousins, Kent Hennessey of Springfield, VA, and Scott Coughlin of Cohasset.

Immediately following the church ceremony, 400 relatives and friends attended a reception at Christo's II. The guest book attendant was Antonia Liopopoulas.

Following a wedding trip to Hawaii, the couple are at home in Dover, N.H.

The bride attended Thayer Academy and will graduate from the University of New Hampshire in 1986. Mr. Wood is a graduate of Thayer Academy and the University of New Hampshire and is pursuing his studies for an advanced degree in Business Management.

Shanahan/Briggs

Mr. and Mrs. Robert C. Briggs of Nashua, New Hampshire, formerly of Cohasset, announce the marriage of their son, Spencer S. Briggs, on June 7 to Terri L. Shanahan of Oklahoma City, Oklahoma.

An evening service was performed at the Casady School Episcopal Chapel of Saint Edward the Confessor in Oklahoma City. Both the bride and groom are graduates of the University of Oklahoma, and they are presently residing in Norman, Oklahoma.

Scituate's Fred Sorrento landed a big striper

Trask Tackle of Cohasset had not one, but two fish stories to share this week.

It seems that local fisherman Fred Sorrento of Conahasset Road in Scituate landed a big one and was able to hang on long enough to produce the evidence.

While trolling last week off the beach at Provincetown, Sorrento landed a striper with an Orange Hoochie lore. Sorrento brought the prize catch to Trask Tackle along Chief Justice Cushing Highway in Cohasset, and had it weighed.

The official weight of this tremendous fish was 58 lbs. 4 1/2 oz. That's a great size, considering the state record is 73 lbs, according to Mark Trask. The store owner noted that most stripers weigh between eight and ten pounds.

Rumor has it, Trask stated, that Sorrento brought the fish to a local restaurant where he undoubtedly got his price for the day's catch. Trask said stripers are among the most delectable fish, and that is why they seldom grow to such proportions.

The other story occurred last week when Shawn O'Donahue of Montreal, Quebec came in to the shop with his latest catch. He had been trolling a Red Head Magnum lore off Minot's Ledge with his brother and uncle Paul O'Donahue of Scituate, when he caught this notable striper.

After another weigh-in, Trask pronounced this fish a remarkable 41 lbs.

An interesting aside to this story, according to Trask, is that O'Donahue was reeling the fish in when the leader became wrapped around the boat's propeller.

It wasn't a huge problem because Shawn's brother simply dove over the side of the boat and grabbed the three-foot fish with his hands.

Barnum's life: A three ring circus

THEATRE REVIEW

By Sue Asci

Perhaps life really is a three-ring circus.

It's a show of sorts, where dreams are real—or maybe only in imagination.

The Young People's Summer Theatre production of "Barnum" performed Aug. 1-3 was a colorful, high-energy musical that follows the life of the famous showman P.T. Barnum.

Barnum's life itself looks at these ideas.

The musical tells the story of Barnum's life up until 1880 when he forms "The Greatest Show on Earth" with partner James Bailey.

As master of "sideshow" entertainment, Barnum formed the American Museum in Connecticut with associate Amos Scudder. After a fire destroys the museum, Barnum tries politics and goes through several changes in his life before returning to show business.

Doug Matthews delivers a wonderful performance as Barnum and he is supported by an equally talented Sue MacPhetres as wife Chairy.

One of the major themes in the play is Barnum's philosophy of "humbug," which is defined for the audience by his wife as being "something designed to mislead or deceive."

Barnum sees "humbug," or his method of selling his shows as dreams or "rosy possibilities."

Throughout most of the show we see a caring between the couple. But we also see the conflict as Chairy would like to see her husband pursue sensible and reachable dreams. But, Barnum develops his life to exciting people and giving them "a glimpse of a miracle."

It is through his imaginative approach, his colorful trade, and his own joy for life and all its possibilities that Barnum makes his own dreams become reality, despite the setbacks he endures.

Barnum also receives support from some of his show people including the Oldest Woman in the World, Joice Heth, delightfully played by Jodi Capeless, and General Tom Thumb, presented in a warm, yet dynamic appearance by Sean Fagan. These "attractions" teach Barnum the strength and value found in appreciating oneself.

Other cast members include: Greg Palmer, as Chester Lyman; Chris Roman, as Amos Scudder; Jennifer McCarthy, as the first woman; Celeste Finn, as the second woman; Jeff Godfrey, as Sherwood Stratton; Jeanne MacLellan, as Mrs. Stratton; Chris Lee, as Julius Goldschmidt; Jenny White, as Jenny Lind; Andy Salvador, as Wilton; Lindsey Berents, as the blues singer; Greg Palmer as Templeton; Arthur Beecher, as Morrisey; and Jeff Godfrey, as James Bailey.

The sense of the grandeur of the Circus show is presented through the combined energies of 70 cast members, ranging in age from 13 to 22 years old and who live all over the South Shore from Marshfield and Pembroke to Hingham.

The song and dance segments and the athletic routines of the clowns exhibit hours of hard work. Although the final product is lively and professional, the cast continues to give the appearance that they are just up there having a good time.

Scene changes are fast paced and creative and features Tom Fusco as the humorous "ringmaster" often introducing moments of serious conflicts in Barnum's personal life.

The musucians were placed on the stage, rather than hidden, and became part of the action on the stage, which is somehow one would feel Barnum would have wanted it.

Banners used and other set decorations were superb.

This is the group's ninth summer of performances. The production was directed and staged by Donald Capen, assisted by Kim Karlberg and Peter Law.

The musical is presented based on the book by Mark Bramble, music by Cy Coleman and lyrics by Michael Stewart.

The Young People's Summer Theatre is an educational theatre for youth. It is based in Scituate and open to participants from any community.

The group is self-supporting, except for some grants from the Massachusetts Arts Lottery which they may receive.

TIC Golf Tournament

Steele Volkswagon, Mazda, Plymouth of Pembroke is offering a 1985 Plymouth Turismo for a prize at this year's Talking Information Center Golf Tournament, Monday, Sept. 16, at the Marshfield Country Club.

All the lucky golfer has to do to win is sink a hole in one on the sixteenth hole!

Russ Steele, owner of Steele, Inc. says the Turismo is a sporty front wheel drive vehicle with rack and pinion steering and a responsive 1.6 litre engine. "It's a two door hatchback with great, sporty looks and is one of our best selling and best-liked cars," said Russ.

Talking Information Center (TIC) is a non-profit radio reading service that provides the reading of daily newspapers, best selling books, magazines, supermarket and department store ads and calendars of community events to over 3,600 blind and visually impaired persons throughout Massachusetts.

TIC utilizes a sideband signal of participating FM radio stations to broadcast the program. Over 125 volunteers contribute their time and effort to provide all of the reading for the service which airs 119 hours every week. In order to hear the programming, a person must have a special radio tuned to the TIC frequency. These cost about $85, and all of the proceeds from this year's tournament will be used to purchase radios for those unable to buy them. There is no charge for TIC's service.

Judy Gilman update

Readers may remember that Hingham Mariner Editor Judy Gilman of Duxbury was seriously injured in an accident in Hingham June 12.

Since that time our colleague has made sometimes incredible and certainly encouraging strides toward recovery. She has been at South Shore Hospital and at Braintree Hospital.

It will come as no surprise to know that insurance and personal resources are incapable of meeting the nearly insurmountable medical expenses.

Fine men and women in Hingham have organized to form an account in her name to relieve some of the financial burden. People who know Judy Gilman and who wish to contribute toward payment of those bills should send checks payable to the Judy Gilman Fund, c/o Hingham Institution for Savings, 55 Main St., Hingham, MA 02043.

Later this year, probably near her October birthdate, the governing committee will organize a fundraising dinner/dance to benefit the Judy Gilman Fund.

Cohasset man heads Conway office

Ribbon cutting ceremonies were held Thursday, July 25 at the new 'Conway Country' office building at 412 Nantasket Avenue, Hull.

Selectmen Leonard Hersch, Tony Petrucci and John Silvia were among the many officials, businessmen and residents attending the event. They were greeted by Jack Conway, board chairman of the 32-office real estate company bearing his name, company President Richard Cahill, manager Peter Murray of Cohasset and the 14 associates of the Hull office. "We've encountered a lot of enthusiasm and made a lot of friends here," Conway said. The company opened a real estate office in Hull last January while the new building was under construction.

The real estate office is now located on the first floor of the 3,500 square foot building. Also occupying offices on the first floor are Joseph Clancy of Construction Project Management, Inc. and Peter Bond and Roger Jackson of Boston Design Build Associates, Inc., an architect-development firm. The offices of Steve and Lawrence Kellem of Kellem & Kellem, Attorneys, are located on the second floor.

The new building is modern in design but incorporates some of the architectural characteristics of traditional Hull buildings. It is based on the shingle-style architecture prevalent on Allerton Hill, with dormers and a variety of sizes and shapes of windows and doors. Milton architect Richard Walwood designed the Hull office building and also Conway buildings in Scituate, Norton and Whitman. "It's nice to have such a receptive client. It allows me to respond to the neighborhood so that the building refects the area's architectural heritage," Walwood said at the opening ceremony.

The building was constructed by the Conway Development Company and will be maintained by the Conway Property Management Division. Interior design by Alden and Connie Mitchell of Scituate includes scenic Hull photographs by Ronald Wilson of East Bridgewater.

Cohasset Building Inspector Edward Poskus (l) congratulates Peter Murray of Cohasset on his appointment as Conway's Hull manager. Cohasset office manager Muriel Desmond and Jack Conway look on.

COHASSET'S SUMMER SPORTS SCENE
FRESHMAN BOYS BASKETBALL

The Freshman boys winning streak came to an end last Tuesday as they lost to an undefeated Brockton team by 12 points.

Adam Whitman led Cohasset on offense pumping in 15 points. Rich Reddick and Ronny Massa turned in good efforts for the Skippers as well.

Thursday, the boys were defeated by Silver Lake by a mere six points.

David Shultz was Cohasset's key offensive player. Chris Watters had an impressive game off the boards. Ronny Massa also played well.

This week Cohasset faces East Bridgewater on Monday and Abington on Wednesday. Both games begin at 8. This will be the boys' last week of summer competition.

COHASSET SWIM TEAM

The Cohasset Swim Team made a strong showing on Friday and defeated the Scituate Yacht Club by 50 points.

David Leahy and Amy Hobbs both had great days picking up three first places apiece. Greg Julian, Jonathan DeLima, Liz Buckley, Becky Golden, Jennifer Jackson and Chip Anderson also swam well with each of them finishing first in two events.

Other first place finishers were: Danny Baird, Rich McLaughlin, Ben Redfield, Chip Anderson, Robin DeVito, Brooke Anderson, Jen Martin, Christina Buckley, Kristen Martin, Lauren DeVito, Alix Knox, Kelly Chase, John Jackson, Chris McLaughlin and Ian Knox.

This Friday, Cohasset has a meet against Hanover. The entire team is swimming very well and will undoubtedly add another victory to their list on Friday.

VARSITY BOYS BASKETBALL

The boys had a great week winning both of their games. Tuesday, Cohasset hung tough and pulled out a win over Hanover.

Tom Larson stood out as having a good game along with David Shumaker. Bobby Shultz also played well.

Thursday, the boys continued to play as a team and beat Marshfield. This was a difficult game for Cohasset, but once again they held onto their lead and prevailed.

Michael Smith had an excellent game underneath the basket along with Tom Larson. Bobby Shultz was also impressive on both ends of the court.

The boys began their playoff season this Tuesday. Hopefully, Cohasset will keep their success going.

FLYING SCOT RACE SERIES

Cohasset's Flying Scot Fleet 10s did not race this weekend in order to encourage skippers to enter the New England Flying Scot District Championships held on August 2-4 in Rockport. In this five-race series under light-to-moderate winds the 17 boats raced Olympic styled courses. Cohasset was very well represented in this series as four Cohasset boats raced.

Jack McCarthy, along with his crew Pete McCarthy and Kate DeLay, did exceptionally well and finished second overall.

Ray Kasperowicz with Bob Davenport came in 10th; Steve Bartow with his crew George Yeager placed 12th and Peter Goedecke along with Karl Goedecke finished 15th.

Looking good may be bad for your health

By Charlotte Carney

Sunshine on my shoulders makes me happy,
Sunshine in my eyes can make me cry'
Sunshine on the water look so lovely,
Sunshine almost always makes me cry

Throughout time, songs, poems, and myths of gods and godesses have proclaimed the sun's importance to mankind.

Without the sun, life as we know it would not exist.

The pyschology of sunshine has long been associated with pleasant happenings.

It is a proven fact that the color in sunlight has a definite positive effect on behaviors and attitudes.

So many of us look forward to the time when the days become longer and warmer, and we once again can go outside to enjoy the freedoms that the pleasing weather allows.

Of course, one of the first things on our list is to acquire a good tan, so that we have that all around healthy look.

However, that tan may not be so healthy at all.

Looking back a bit, it was not always chic to have a tan. Because of our changing socio-economic culture, tans have only been fashionable since the end of World War II. Before that time, it was only the laborer who had nicely-bronzed skin. It was the the privileged who could afford to sit on the porch swing in the cool shade, while workers sweated in the hot sun.

As so often, standards and economic change in our fickle society turned the tables and it became a show of wealth to have the tanned look. It showed that one could afford to visit resort areas winter and summer, and play outside while the working man was restricted to the indoors.

Sun bathing has become a national pastime, to ensure that "in" look of the tan.

Tanning salons have sprung up all over the country to cater to those who have less time for sun bathing or those who simply want to get a head start on the season.

However, unless you fully understand the consequences of your actions, all of this "getting your socially-acceptable look", whether it be at a salon or in the sun, can be hazardous to your health.

Watch out! Lying in the sun is comforting, but those rays may be hazardous to your health. Here J.L. Williams (above) and Sean Cogill (below) tan upon the grass of Cohasset Town Pool. (Rose Cundari)

Aside from the obvious burn of the skin, according to Dermatologist Marcos Sastre of Quincy, who will soon be moving to our community, "certain wavelengths of the sun's ultraviolet light seem directly related to the development of skin cancer."

Sastre explained that the sun destroys the elastic fibers of the skin, causing wrinkles and premature aging.

The hours between 10 a.m. and 2 p.m., when the sun's rays are the strongest, are particularly damaging to the skin.

The Law and You

by Richard Price, Attorney-at-Law

A PROPER WILL

No matter how small an estate or how simple your desires, it is worth the expense to engage the services of a qualified attorney to draw your will. The complexity and interrelationships of taxes, property, domestic relations and other laws make a homemade will a frivolous, dangerous and highly expensive way to cut corners. The ultimate cost of a homemade will typically can be much greater than one drawn by a qualified attorney. It will be your heirs, however, not you, who will pay the price. A properly prepared will provides a plan for distributing your assets the way that you want them distributed. The will must also consider the needs of your beneficiaries as well as the federal and state laws which impact upon your dispositive plans.

If you already have a will, for the sake of your loved ones you should make sure that your will is current and up-to-date. Consider, perhaps a living trust for your children. It is in your best interest to try and avoid the time and expense olf Probate whenever possible. LAW OFFICES OF RICHARD PRICE, 760 Chief Justice Cushing Hwy., Rt. 3A, Cohasset, 383-9882. I am available daily by appt.

HINT

A will must be flexible enough to take into consideration changes in family circumstances which occur after it has been signed.

Politicus — by David A. Mittell, Jr.

Our officeholders need to mind the store

Nothing comes so naturally to our statesmen nor becomes them so little as what can best be called "gratuitous grandstanding." Gratuitous grandstanding takes place when an issue arises about which the statesman in question knows little or nothing and has no responsibility in his charge of office to do anything about. But appreciating the possibility of ingratiating himself cheaply with some interest group or other, he makes a statement or issues a proclamation in support of whatever drivel the special interest wants.

"Coalition builders" like Ray Flynn and Mike Dukakis are especially prone to this disease. Over the years both, for example, have made ignorant statements about Northern Ireland, statements whose factual assumptions derive from the prejudices of Ireland's terrorist fringe. In another example, in his first term, Gov. Dukakis proclaimed a "Sacco-Vanzetti Day," thus genuflecting at the altar of the Old Left, Italian Americans, and at least one cold-blooded murderer. (Sacco's gun has been conclusively linked to the celebrated Braintree hold-up for which Sacco and Vanzetti were executed.)

Lately Dukakis seems to have matured with regard to the silly, dangerous causes he is sometimes asked to support. He had a well-earned "learning experience" last year when he filed a friend-of-the-court brief supporting environmentalists trying to stop the construction of corporate headquarters by the Codex Corporation in Canton — a project that had been approved after the most exhaustive and proper review by government.

In this instance, Dukakis undoubtedly assumed that his curious little amicus curiae would fail, the project would go forward, and that he would get an A for effort by the environmentalists who were led by his long-time admirer Dave Cowens. To the Duke's surprise and undoubted consternation, the court found for the environmentalists and gave state government the power to take Codex's building, then half-built, by eminent domain. The Cowens crowd was ecstatic until Dukakis, who had shot himself in the foot by trying to grandstand on the issue, correctly decided that the state had to honor its long-standing commitment to Codex or drive industry away in droves.

Since the Codex embarrassment, Dukakis, who is at the heighth of both his political and his intellectual powers, seems to have recognized that he has plenty to do governing the state without lending his office and reputation to causes that from a governor's point of view ought to be beyond the pale. He did get burned again recently when a few American Communists on their way to Moscow for a "youth meeting" dropped by for a gubernatorial sendoff. As Communists do, they talked of peace and friendship, and they duped the Duke into issuing a proclamation of support. When the truth came out the Duke's face was as red as their politics, and he subsequently rebuked them for their treacherous rhetoric upon arrival in Moscow.

When I'm governor I intend to delegate proclamation writing to Lt. Gov. Kerry (if you know what I mean), and that's what I would advise Dukakis to do for the rest of his term. The governor is doing enough good things these days so that he doesn't need to demean himself and his office with public pandering. As he matures that seems to be the direction he's taking.

The same cannot be said of Boston Mayor Ray Flynn, who seems to think he is mayor of the megalopolis, not the metropolis. Nothing so much illustrates this as Flynn's brazen behavior with regard to the B.A.A. Marathon. Here is an event that is competently if not perfectly run by a private group to the enormous economic and honorific benefit of Flynn's Boston. Since the finish line and 4/26ths of the run's route are in Boston, the mayor of Boston is one of many officials who have a right to be heard in the planning of future races.

But apparently because he has run the event without qualifying, Flynn has been going around saying that the Marathon "belongs to the people of the city," which means he wants to run it himself. He has instructed young Paul Barrett, one of the few aides he has hired with a real capacity for future excellence, but a young and inexperienced aide nonetheless, to instruct the Marathon as to what is good for it. Through Barrett Flynn also presumes to tell the little hamlets, Newton and Brookline, what is good for them. When selectmen from Hopkinton didn't act on Flynn's proposals with what was considered deliberate speed, one Flynn flunkie (not Barrett) suggested that Hopkinton needn't be the starting line anymore. Someone should tell the flunkie's boss that Boston needn't be the finish line either.

The real trouble with such arrogant behavior on an issue that is mainly irrelevant to the mayor of Boston's charge of office is that it contributes to the fact that Ray Flynn's city hall is a dump. Ray Flynn is neither as smart nor as experienced as Mike Dukakis, and most of Flynn's appointments aren't 50 percent as able as the average Dukakis appointment. Flynn, in short, needs to mind the store, not try to fix things like the century-old B.A.A. Marathon or the four-century-old quarrel between the Irish Catholic Celts and the Protestant Celts of the Scottish Plantation.

This was brought home to me the other day when I dropped by Boston City Hall to pay a tax bill on a piece of property I own in the city. Outside the elevator there was a large framed color photograph of Flynn cozying up to Cardinal Law (one wonders if a similar picture will materialize when the new Episcopal bishop of Massachusetts is installed in a few months) but the elevator was out of order. So, too, was the men's room, and so it goes in Ray Flynn's Boston. While the mayor tries to fix things that he didn't break that don't fall in his jurisdiction, far too many hacks appointed by his predecessor loiter in the corridors of city hall and languish on the municipal payroll. That's part of the reason taxpayers from the well-run hamlets of the South Shore have once again been required to bail Boston out.

One does not like to be too hard on men like Dukakis and Flynn. They have chosen the usually thankless profession of public service over what would have been far more lucrative careers in business or law. When one quarrels with their public performance it is well to remember that in the case of both men, we could and have done a whole lot worse.

Nevertheless, it seems to me not too much to ask of all elected officials that they stick to their jobs and forgo gratuitous grandstanding on issues not directly pertaining to the huge jobs they have to do. Mike Dukakis, at last, and after a number of blunders, seems to be doing just that. Ray Flynn still has a long way to go. That's bad news not only for the people of the city of Boston, but for all the state's taxpayers who will probably be required to bail him out again.

FROM THE KITCHEN

by JOAN PINKHAM

Most of us go through the day in a golden glow when invited out to dinner, happy knowing we'll be eating food prepared by someone other than ourselves. Peg Bracken writes that those who hate to cook should resist the temptation to accept the invitation, for sooner or later, the day of reckoning comes along and it's your turn to entertain. As the dinner date approaches, there's a frantic search through all one's recipe books for a company dish to serve. Peg suggests having at least eight company recipes on hand and in her funny way says: "Actually, eight such dishes should be enough and if by any chance you find yourself serving the same thing to the same people, invite someone else instead." One for your files is good for a weekend brunch when you have summer visitors, an easy Sunday night summer, or bridge luncheon day and is called simply

SUNDAY SUPPER SPECIAL

1/4 C. chopped pimiento
3/4 C. drained peas

Breathlessly we wait until native sweet corn is as high as the proverbial elephant's eye, haunt the road stands 'til we see the first sign, pull up and gasp when we read the small price — $3.75 a dozen in Duxbury the other day. Why corn should cost 35 cents an ear is a puzzlement. Could it be that the grower knows we would pay anything, short of mortgaging the house, for this most favorite of veggies? Rasberries are $3 for half a pint, blueberries at $2 a pint — summers bounty is costly indeed. If only we could revert to the days when we went off into the woods armed with a pail to pick blueberries for this family favorite of ours called

BLUEBERRY SLUMP

Bring to boil in large saucepan:
1 qt. blueberries
1 C. brown sugar
1/4 tsp. salt
1 T. vinegar

Combine in bowl:
1 1/2 C. flour
1 T. shortening
1/2 tsp. salt
3 tsp. baking powder
2/3 C. milk

Combine first four ingredients and add 2/3 C. milk. Drop by teaspoonfuls onto blueberry mixture (like dumplings). Cover tightly until cooked. Serve warm with whipped or ice cream.

Quick, simple to prepare and good. Those are the ingredients for a perfect summer meal when you're vacationing. Kate Ford's recipe is just that. You might even make two while you're at it, putting one in the freezer.

PIZZA WITH MEAT CRUST

In bowl combine with a fork 1 lb. ground beef, 1/3 C. fresh bread crumbs, 1/4 C. brown stock, 1 onion, chopped, 1 garlic clove, minced, 1 tsp. salt and 1/4 tsp. pepper. Press the mixture into a 9" pie tin to form a shell and bake in 375 degree oven for 15 min. Pour off any fat that has collected and spread the shell with 3/4 C. drained and chopped tinned Italian plum tomatoes combined with 1/2 tsp. crushed dried red peppers. Arrange 1/4 lb. mozzarella cheese on top and sprinkle with 3 T. freshly grated Parmesan cheese, 1 T. ea. chopped fresh basil, parsley and oregano, with salt and pepper to taste. Bake pizza for 15 min. more and serve in wedges. Serves four.

From one of our summer residents, Crista Byrnes, comes this recipe she brought back from a trip to Ireland. Hopefully, other vacationers who are new readers will send along their favorites, for as our good cooks whose kitchens are here year-round know, that's what this column is all about —sharing:

COLD RICE SALAD

Combine 3 C. cold, cooked rice, 1/2 C. each of cooked peas and corn, 1/4 C. each diced red and green peppers, 4 slices bacon, cooked 'til crisp. Salt and pepper to taste. Toss with 1/3 C. olive oil. Chill for at least 12 hours. Serves 8 to 10.

PATCHES — by Lois Martin

A time to laugh and a time to cry, if you can handle it. . .

I wouldn't care to know anyone who couldn't do it. On the other had I'd choose not be around someone who did it all the time.

Crying, a means of expressing emotion. It can be happy or sad. But sometimes in our living it's got to get done, like laughing.

In our cycles of believing emotions should be restrained neither seen nor heard, we have gone through spells of supressing crying. We have given extra points for control.

Since then, though we aren't up to the level of wailing on the evening news reports, we are more reasonable about crying.

First let's settle on what crying is. It is a response to being touched, not physically, though that's possible, emotionally.

The very act of crying, being caught with our emotions hanging out, has been a number of things. Embarrassing, for one, or contagious for another. It's when our guard's down that we are crying. Americans like both having their guard up and having a great deal of emotion. "Let it all hang out," replaced stoicisim we could never pull off.

Men have been made wimps or heros because of crying. We would let John Wayne cry. That was precious. He was big and strong and we melted as he allowed a poignant moment.

But Ed Muskie was reduced when he proved himself a fellow being by crying. Let's be fair. Ed didn't burst into tears. That's something that's frowned on incidentally. It's okay to cry now. But don't go around bursting into tears. Move up on crying gradually. That's more acceptable.

And don't sniffle or snivel about it. Have yourself a nominal time of crying, tears flowing, jaw contorted, but don't let that drag on. You know what I mean, the after shocks of crying with shoulders still shuddering. That is left, in social acceptance, to little kids who hurt both kees falling.

I'm late getting at this. I recognize that. We've been howling or having our eyes fill up or quietly weeping for years without having precise guidelines for crying.

And there are people who spend whole days wimpering. That won't do at all.

Women who cry are either whiners or winners. One woman told me she had a terrible time controlling herself, that her emotions were on tap. And that she's one of the few in a crowd quietly sobbing as the ribbon is cut at supermarket openings.

This is a fact. Both men and women want to cry sometime. We both appreciate control. Women have been accused of crying to get their way. Wait a minute. For all we know men have been crying to get theirs. The data isn't complete on that yet. How many men have been granted a right to an extra nine holes after their chins started quivering when they were told a certain time to be home. Don't make assumptions in haste.

We are different, we sexes. I offer that as delighted confirmation rather than as a news bulletin.

I have seen men dissolve into tears when a sports figure gets his shirt number strung up to a ceiling. They have writhed in pain, these men, trying not to cry (that's always in good taste, incidentally, trying not to.) But the very sight of a major sports figure retiring brings forward anguish few women have known.

Remember our definition, crying is a response to being touched, somehow. And when Bob Cousy retired I feared I witnessed a lifelong breakdown rather than a person simply 'being touched.'

One of my weakest moments in life came when Lassie came home. I was doing all right till she reached that little knoll where Timmy spotted her. Then I collapsed into tears. I wasn't sure I'd get over it, Lassie coming home.

Some people cry when they're hurt. Some cry when they're sad or afraid. But the most controversial crying in our society is not borne of these emotions being released.

The debatable releases have to do with simple stirrings of emotions when you don't have the excuse of a broken leg or a lost friend.

It is no mystery to me that actors can howl on cue. I've got at least 20 friends who can burst into tears when the sun shines full on a buttercup. In fact anything good or normal or nice in nature among beings can inspire them to blowing their noses and wiping their eyes for hours.

And patriotism has sent as many people sobbing as saluting. I'm relieved that the military forces haveseen fit to draft men who don't cry when they see the flag. How imperial would we seem to be to Russia, how dominant and intimidating, if we had had batallions and squadrons of men teary eyed and shoulders bouncing with their faces in their hands as the flag was marched by them. That wouldn't look good. We'd never be able to pull off superiority in weaponry and democracy if the guys on battleships and in tanks and in the air get misty eyed easily.

But I would not care to know a man who couldn't cry. I'd figure he either didn't know how or why. And living we must know both. We are richer with emotions reasonably expressed. I address that mostly to men because as I say women are now retraining themselves not to cry as a response to being emotionally touched.

But let's agree on this. Crying is a basic element that can happen. It's okay. Sometimes it's good. And I hope I haven't upset you.

MUSINGS — By John H. Cutler

☐ Art connoisseurs agree that Old Masters command a better price than old mistresses.

☐ Music played at weddings reminds some cynics of martial music played for soldiers before they go into battle.

☐ Unknown is the author who wrote: "Fairly good poetry is like fairly good eggs."

☐ Spectators at the first atomic test thought it was one of the most beautiful things they had ever seen. But Arthur Koestler sounds a warning note: "Hitherto man had to live with the idea of death as an individual; from now onward mankind will have to live with the idea of its own death as a species."

☐ If a left-handed baseball pitcher is called a southpaw, why isn't a right-hander called a northpaw?

☐ Everyone remembers what Pres. Calvin Coolidge said: "When a great many people are unable to find work, unemployment results."

☐ A sportswriter named George Daley could be just as insipid. One example: "Twenty-five years is a long time. Thirty-five is a long, long time."

☐ An autobiography gives you a chance to tell the truth about other people, but not too much about yourself.

☐ Computers (which are morons) can solve all kinds of problems except the unemployment problem which they create. Incidentally, the toughest decision a salesman faces is when he is about to buy a machine designed to replace him.

☐ Some school superintendents tend to rent homes rather than buy them.

☐ In one of her poems, Rosemary Thomas, a published poet who lived in Duxbury, said Powder Point Bridge is only a quarter of a mile long. The bridge is much closer to a half mile.

☐ According to a critic, trying to determine what is going on in the world by reading a newspaper is like trying to tell time by watching the second hand of a clock.

☐ There was an article in Business Week magazine on "How utilities will pay the piper for new power plants."

☐ An excerpt from Ben Hecht's "A Child of the Century:" "I remember a dinner party in the 20s when a famous lady novelist said to Michael Arlen, who had affected a shepherd's crook for evening wear, 'You look almost like a woman.' And Mr. Arlen studying her for a moment, answered, 'So do you.' "

☐ Folks wouldn't get divorced for such trivial reasons if they didn't get married for such trivial reasons.

☐ The British love freedom almost as much as they used to love depriving their colonists of it.

The Cape Cod life you've waited for is here. Now. In Duxbury.

Oceanwoods is selling as fast as it's being built, for a lot of reasons. Cape living, without the battle of the bridge. Quality construction and creative architecture you thought had passed you by. Residents' use of one of the world's great beaches, in one of New England's most beautiful towns.

Choice two-bedroom townhomes and condominiums remain, from 1500 to more than 2000 sq. ft. From $154,000 to $260,000. With a few remaining single-family residences, designed by award-winning architects.

Come enjoy 23 acres of salt air, balconies, ocean view, crickets at night and serenity—only 45 minutes from Boston. But, do it now. So someone else isn't enjoying what you should be.

THE NO-COMPROMISE SOLUTION TO BUYING AN AUTOMOBILE.

When you lay out a substantial amount of money for an automobile, you should get what you want. Buying a car shouldn't be an exercise in making sacrifices.

Saab doesn't ask you to give up anything.

Superb handling and performance have made the Saab 900 one of Europe's most respected sports sedans. But that performance is delivered in return for little gas* and less fuss by a reliable two-liter engine. And unlike many other high-performance cars, the Saab is perfectly at home in the workaday world. Four adults can travel comfortably all day in a Saab, or the rear two seats can be folded flat to add extra space for cargo.

We'll be happy to tell you about a lot of other features that you won't have to give up when you buy a Saab.

SAAB
The most intelligent car ever built.

Effects of the sun

Dr. Marcos stressed that it is never too early to protect the skin from the sun's damaging ultraviolet rays.

Young children especially, should be properly protected because skin damage can begin long before the age of 20.

There are many illusions about sun bathing. A hazy or even cloudy day can still deliver a serious burn. Thin clothing does not shield the body from the burn-producing rays of the sun, but ordinary plate glass will.

The effects of sun are multiplied by reflection from water or snow. Snow blindness, which is a burn on the cornea of the eye, can be excruciating.

A serious fact is that chronic exposure to the sunlight will also produce the hard, dark grey, horny lesions called Keratosis which are precancerous.

Fair-skinned people should be particularly careful, as it is their tendency to burn more quickly and severely.

Fortunately, with all of the rather unsettling news about sun exposure, you may not have to purchase a heavy, full body cover-up to protect yourself from the sun's ultraviolet rays.

According to Dr. Stanley Hoffman and his wife Joyce of the Beechwood Medical Center, fewer and fewer cases of sunburn have been reported because of the sun screening products on the market today. "The public has become more aware of the dangers involved in too much skin exposure," said Mrs. Hoffman.

It would be advantageous to use these products while boating, fishing or even sitting under an umbrella at the pool, because of the dangers of reflective light burning by the sun.

Summer is such a wonderful time of the year in our town because of the varied outdoor activities. A few moments spent protecting our skin with a good sun screen is a small price to pay to maintain our health and good looks. May we all continue to enjoy the good life. . . wisely!

Family story hours

The Paul Pratt Memorial Library invites school-age children and their parents to a Family Story Hour Monday, August 12 at 7:30 p.m. This is the final program in a series for family enjoyment.

Ms. Anne Hayden, Children's Librarian from Marshfield, will be the guest storyteller. Her tales will include "Margrette," a tale of the sea, as well as the "Story of Clytie," and an unusual tale from Scotland, "Incident on the Isle of Aigge."

Ms. Hayden has performed extensively on the South Shore and in her own library as well as at the Paul Pratt Library. She is also a member of the South Shore Storytellers. her program will last about 45 minutes.

False alarm law

Legislation regarding false fire alarms filed by State Representative Mary Jeanette Murray (R) 3rd Plymouth District, has been signed into law by the Governor.

The new statute increases the reward which selectmen can offer for information leading to the arrest and conviction of a person who circulates or caused a false alarm of fire.

"False fire alarms have always been of deep concern to me. Our firefighters are in danger everytime a fire truck leaves the station. There have been numerous accidents to firemen going to false alarms. There have also been firemen killed in these accidents," Rep. Murray said.

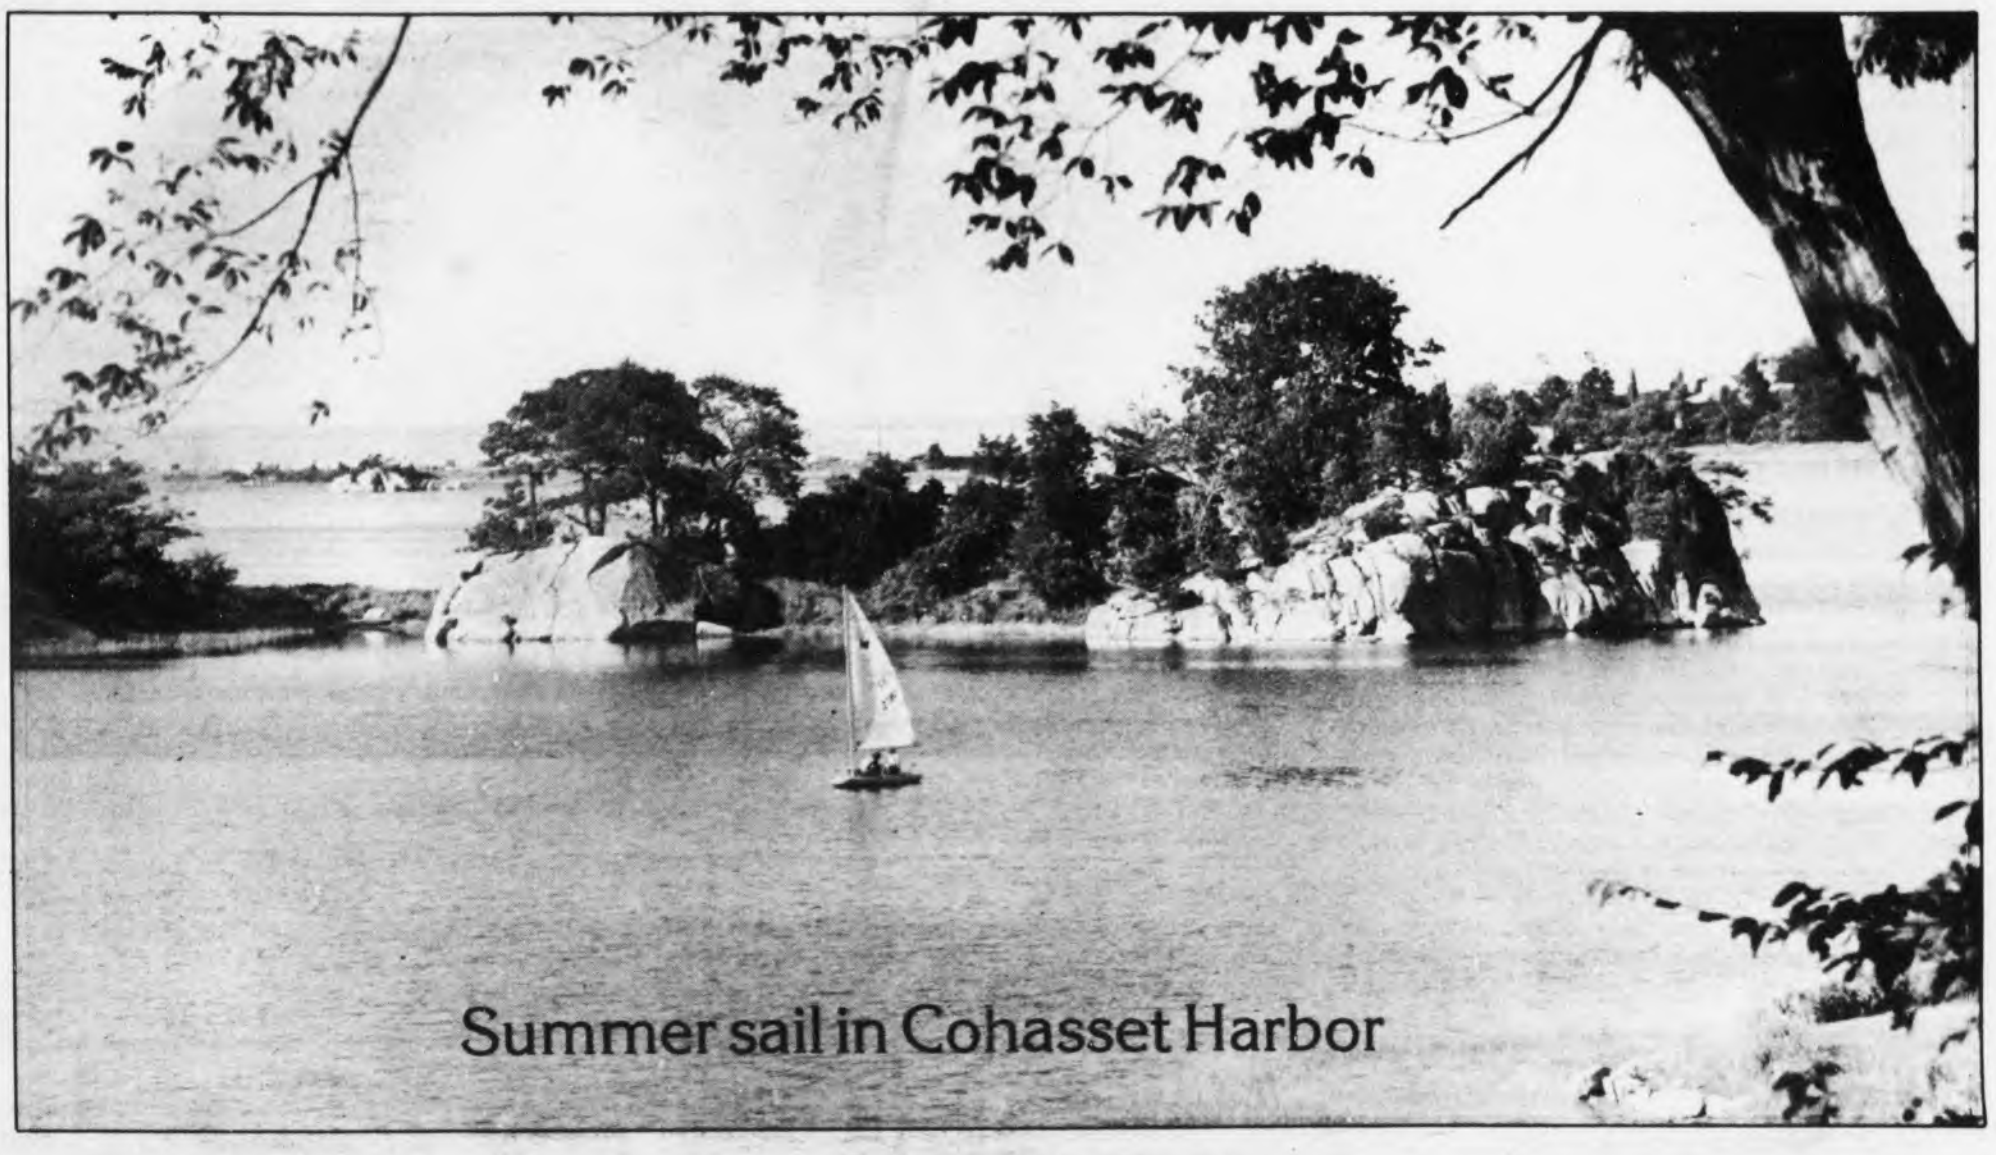
Taxpayers would be amazed at the costs affiliated with false alarms.

Boston has kept statistics on false alarms. According to the Boston Fire Commissioner's office, in 1982 there were 11,803 false alarms. The cost per false alarm is $860 totaling $10,150,580. Boston Fire Department lowered this figure to 9,082 false alarms with a new program. The figure for 1984 had crept up to 9,715 costing the taxpayers of Boston last year $8,354,900.

"Cohasset, Hingham and Hull taxpayers also pay for false alarms. I urge residents of my District to be alert to anyone who might be calling a false alarm," concluded Rep. Murray.

The following data on false alarms in Rep. Murray's District are: Cohasset, in 1983 had 18 false alarms at $400 per false alarm totaling $7,200 in 1984, 10 false alarms totaling $4,000.

Hingham in 1984 had 57 false alarms at $975 per alarm totaling $55,750, in the first six months of 1985, 20 false alarms totaling $19,000.



Hull had 116 false alarms in 1984, $480 (approximately) per alarm totaling around $55,680.

Once again, state refuses to fund sewer plan

Once again, Cohasset has been foiled in its attempt to gain funding approval of its alternative wastewater disposal plan. Although in the midst of an appeal to the federal Environmental Protection Agency (EPA) in Washington, D.C., the state Division of Water Pollution Control (DWPC) has reiterated its denial of funding.

The only portion of the Ward Engineering plan to garner support from the state DWPC is the town's connection to the Hull treatment facility.

In a letter addressed to the sewer commission July 31, DWPC Chief Engineer Paul Taurasi responded to the town's latest submittal after the state EPA denied funding for the major portion of the project. According to the engineer, " a number of the responses are still either incomplete or inadequate."

Both sewer commissioner Charles DeSantis and Ted Guild were not available for comment this week.

Taurasi added, "many outstanding issues have still not been adequately addressed" by the town in its latest appeal of funding denial, "including major questions on your collector sewer and on-site rehabilitation recommendations. Additionally, the erroneous eligibility and funding assumptions have yet to be corrected."

The regional office of the EPA in Boston denied the majority of the project's funding in June. Later that month, selectmen authorized the sewer commission to begin a legal appeal of that decision to the federal level in Washington, D.C.

Longtime opponent of the Ward plan, R. Murray Campbell, said there is only one option for Cohasset to follow. "If Cohasset doesn't take responsible and competent action, it may be in court for failure to comply with the Agreement of Judgement. Cohasset is now wide open to such action," he said, referring to the state demand that Cohasset's sewage treatment system be updated and improved.

The old Pasture Road resident, who has kept close watch on the proceedings through the years, also noted, "Cohasset must submit an application which recognizes the rules apply to everybody, rather than continue to make up your own rules and then complain that DEQE (Department of Environmental Quality Engineering) is capricious."

DWPC chief engineer Taurasi stated in his letter to the sewer commission that "many outstanding issues have still not been adequately addressed, including major questions on your collector sewer and on-site rehabilitation recommendations. Additionally, the erroneous eligibility and funding assumptions have yet to be corrected."

He continued, "it is the decision of the Division that the 'Supplemental Wastewater Management Facilities Plan - July, 1984' prepared by Ward Engineering Associates is not approvable. Until such time as all of our comments are adequately addressed, this office can take no further action on the plan."

School approves class option plan

The school committee decided Monday to accept the recommendation of its administrators; to provide a four-part program directed toward the educational and social needs of next year's sixth grade students.

Parents and former teachers of these students pleaded with the school committee last month to add a fourth classroom teacher next year. They argued at that time that these students would benefit greatly from reduced classroom sizes. Saying that many of the youngsters within this class were socially and academically immature, the parents requested the extra classroom teacher as one method to individualize the efforts being made to help them.

Committee members at that time said the constraints of the budget would likely prohibit such a move, although that would be among the options reviewed by administrators.

Since that meeting, Deer Hill School Principal Kenneth Ekberg, Supt. Eugene Crowell, Financial Manager Steve Hart and Osgood School Principal John Creamer met to discuss and develop options.

One option open for the committee's consideration was the addition of a fourth classroom teacher. Since there is no such appropriation within the budget, Supt. Crowell said it would be his duty to "find the money elsewhere in the budget, or fight for it before the advisory committee." The other option would be to hire a half-time teacher, similar to the situation developed this past year when the students

Friends gather to bid final farewell

For the second time in as many weeks, the white linen cloth hung over the coffin as it was escorted down the central aisle of St. Anthony's Church.

The white wooden pews were filled with friends and family members, embracing each other as they bade farewell to another friend.

The funeral Mass this sunny Tuesday morning was celebrated for John Ryan, 20, a Boston College junior who died this week after battling injuries sustained in a car crash August 3. The driver of that car, Mark Delaney, 16, died the day of the accident and was buried last Tuesday morning.

For the fourth time this year, Rev. John Keohane celebrated a funeral Mass for a Cohasset youth killed in a tragic and senseless auto accident.

Ryan, a graduate of Cohasset High School, was a popular youth here and at Boston College. In high school he had pitched for the varsity baseball team.

Tuesday morning, his father and mother, John and Kathleen Ryan and his sister Jill, sat along the front pews of the church and listened to the eulogy presented by Rev. Keohane.

"We are making a prayerful farewell to John," Rev. Keohane said. "To his parents and sister, I say listen to the words of the Gospel. Christ says to us, do not let your hearts be troubled, have faith in Me."

The gospel recited that morning recalled a conversation between Jesus and his disciple Thomas. "I am the way, the truth and the light," he told the questioning apostle.

In his sermon to John's friends and family, Rev.

No clothing payments

Because the budget money has been "spent for other things," firefighters will not receive the final balance of their clothing allowance payments until after the special town meeting.

After a bill was submitted by Chief Martin Dooley for the allowance, Town Accountant Don Andrew replied that the money was previously expended. There are no funds remaining in the fire department expense account, he wrote. Specifically, the funds allocated for uniform and clothing allowance under the general expense account was spent for other things.

Because the town accountant can not approve bills in excess of appropriated money, Andrew said the only alternative was to wait until more money can be allocated at the special town meeting in September or October.

He noted that steps will be taken by the accountant's office to prevent this type of budget overrun in the future.

Cushing Plaza sale

Cape Elizabeth Realty Trust bought Cushing Plaza two weeks ago from former owner Zaven Dadekian. J. Bildner and Sons, a new gourmet-style supermarket which plans to locate within the plaza, is part of that new ownership.

Jim Bildner, principal in Windward Management Co., owners and operators of two J. Bildner and Sons stores in Boston, is a partner in this realty trust. The new supermarket is expected to be opened in early October, according to Bildner.

Windward Management plans to open a third Boston store, the Cohasset store, and one in Belmont.

The new plaza owners hope to attract "upscale" commercial tenants similar to the type of store J. Bildner is completing there now. Their supermarket will suit the affluent tastes of residents in this area, according to marketing studies completed by Windward Management.

Among the renovations planned for the Route 3A plaza are repavement of the parking lot and some remodeling work.

The case of short lobsters

Police arrested a Howe Road resident Sunday afternoon for confiscating 115 short lobsters from Cohasset Harbor.

Acting on a call from William Figueiredo of Parker Avenue, police stopped a car about 4 p.m. driven by Lawrence G. Grazio, 37, of Howe Road. He had been driving down Parker Avenue, according to police, with Figueiredo's son clinging to the hood of the moving vehicle.

When police asked Grazio to open the trunk, they found ten regulation-sized lobsters and 115 short lobsters. Grazio was arrested and arraigned Monday in Quincy District Court.

According to state statute, if convicted, the penalty for taking undersized lobsters is a minimum of $25 per lobster, or a maximum of $50 per lobster, and the confiscation of the equipment used to capture the lobsters.

Police Prosecutor Brian Noonan said a short lobster is less than three and three-sixteenths inches long when measured from its eyes to the beginning of the tail.

Minors in possession

Police arrested three adult males and one male minor early Tuesday morning and charged them with minors in possession of alcohol.

Police responded at 1:45 a.m. Tuesday to a call regarding a noisy group on Border Street.

Michael D. Hartery, 19, of 158 Beal Street Ext., Hingham, was arrested along with William F. Mahn III, of 15 Bradford Street in Rockland and Russell A. St.Don, 20, of 694 Country Way in Scituate.

The youths were arraigned Tuesday at Quincy District Court.

School approves sixth grade option plan

were in fifth grade.

The third option developed by the administrators, the one approved by the committee, is a four-part plan designed to meet the social and educational needs of this class.

As Supt. Crowell explained, the plan would include dividing the class into small reading groups of 10-15 students led by Mrs. Gallagher, special needs reading specialist. This plan would identify and service those students in need of remedial reading, Supt. Crowell explained.

The second phase would include a supplemental language arts program led by tutor Mrs. Atkinson. The project would be funded through federal Title One funds and would result in the reinforcement of remedial instruction in language arts. That was one area in the SRA testing where students' scores did not show significant growth from past years, Crowell added.

The third phase would introduce a University of Massachusetts program designed to help teachers impart social and study skills to their students. This in-service training program would help teachers learn how to deal with these social needs, and to help their students overcome problems "targeted at their lack of maturity," Crowell stated. Committee members hoped that teachers would share their new-found knowledge with parents in a series of discussions and meetings.

The fourth part of the plan will take place during the last 35 minutes of the school day when teachers discuss assigned projects with students and assist them with their study and organizational skills. Outside intervention or counseling will also take place during the last half-hour of the school day. This section was planned to assist students in developing the organizational and study skills necessary when they enter the junior high school next year.

According to Supt., the administrators unanimously supported the four-part plan. "That option will identify the class member without the ability to concentrate, improve their mastery of the language arts, and will indicate to the parents we are doing everything within the budget to address this situation," he said.

Deer Hill Principal Kenneth Ekberg, who also endorsed the plan, said there are 78 students expected in that grade level in September. That is the same number of students predicted in June, including three special needs students who spend more than 60 percent of their time outside the mainstream classroom.

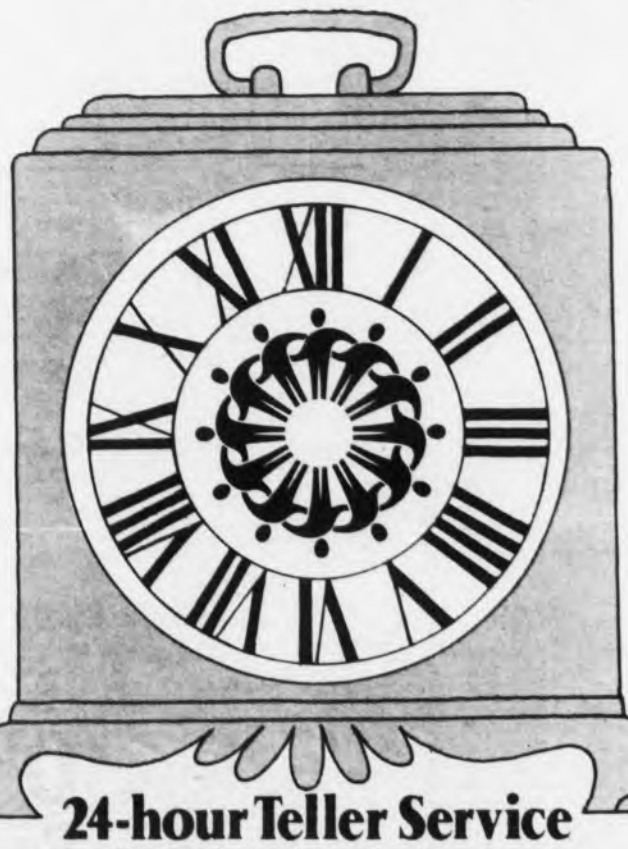
Committee Chairman Joseph Nedrow re-emphasized his belief that "we won't be getting at the problem just by adding another teacher."

One parent was concerned about the concentrated, smaller classes solely for reading and language arts. Supt. Crowell explained that's where individualized attention was most needed, according to test scores and student evaluation. Ekberg noted he had individually reviewed each student using numerous methods including the number of children from single-parent homes, from divorced homes, latch-key kids, and concluded the problems stem from a "large middle group of kids" - a majority of students who are neither academically above or below average.

"This class is not a group of socially reprehensible kids," Ekberg said. " It's just that numerically, there is a large middle group. I have looked at this group in more ways than you can imagine. This is not an atypical class. The stigma attached to this class does not stem from the way they behave. Not one kid in this group is a standout discipline problem. That in itself is atypical. We are dealing with a large middle group."

One parent commented that no one ever accused any student within the class as a behavioral problem, but noted that the students "are lacking organizational skills and are not capable of working independently. I appreciate the option, but I don't think that is a substitute for another teacher." She noted their former teachers agree an extra classroom teacher would help individualize attention.

Chairman Nedrow repeated, "there has been more data, thought and concern given to this class. There's been some conscientious thought to this." Committee members agreed the plan was worth implementation, with careful watch and participation by the students' parents.



Member Diana Kornet suggested that teachers meet with parents to discuss what they have learned through the University of Massachusetts in-service training program.

Once more, church is filled with friends

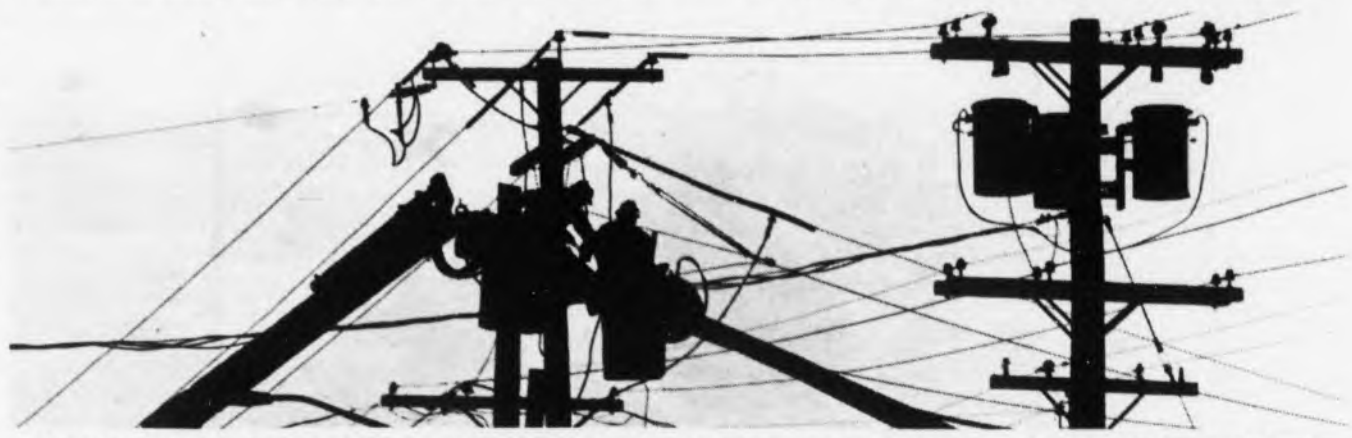
Keohane acknowledged the "sad hearts" that filled the church that warm August morning. He explained how Christ had cried at the death of his friend Lazarus. We are all saddened by this great loss, he noted.

"We are sad, but we have hope in Christ," Rev. Keohane added. "Both emotions are there. Sadness and hope." The pastor of St. Anthony's explained that loving friends make the anxiety and worry of John's family easier to bear.

"Know that John is in the presence of the Lord, a loving father. That makes our sadness bearable," he said, adding that death is not a wall but a beginning. John has now entered the presence of heaven "with love Himself."

Rev. Keohane continued, "we hope for the Ryans, our hope is anchored in Christ. As we leave the church today, we ask the Lord to receive him .

"The Ryans are as sad as can be. We know that all of you are behind them . Put your faith in the Lord and know that John is welcomed into the presence of love itself."

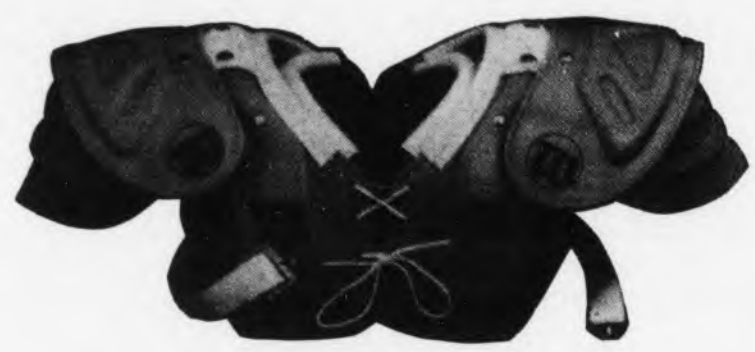


Shortly before the conclusion of the Mass, two of John's closest friends from Boston College made their personal farewells. One quoted a favorite poem by Robert Frost, saying "John was gold, and nothing gold can stay."

He said John will be remembered by his many friends as a humorous, gentle, sociable - a daring young man who lived life to its fullest and loved his life.

Another friend claimed, "I am proud to be one of his best friends." He recalled the special qualities of his friend, particularly John's ability to lift another's spirit.

"John was always there to get you going," he said, holding back his choking tears. "He loved life. One song comes to mind when I think of John - 'I Did It My Way.' That he did.



"So long for now J.R., I'm going to miss you."

Attendance policy revamped

For the second time this summer, the school committee has revised the junior/senior high school attendance policy.

After a discussion Monday night, committee members decided that students still must bring written excuse the day they return to school, but parents will not be required to contact the school the day of the absence.

The committee voted last month that a written excuse note would be required, but failed to decide whether students would be held liable if their parents failed to notify school personnel the day of the absence. Prior to Prop. 2 1/2, an attendance clerk placed calls to the absent students. In that manner, all students would be accounted for each day.

But administrators said that without the clerk, placing phone calls throughout the morning is too time consuming for the office secretary and holds up the phone all morning.

Committee member Diana Kornet said under the current policy, students will be punished academically if their parents fail to call the school. She objected to that regulation, and asked what moral or legal obligation the schools have if a student is not in school. She wondered if PSO volunteers could help call the students' homes, along with the office secretary.

"Do we have the obligation to know the whereabouts of the kids if they don't attend school? If not, then we throw that part out (phone call to school), although I've always felt we had that obligation," member Jack Langmaid stated.

Supt. Eugene Crowell explained there is a legal obligation but he was unsure where the school's liability for the student begins and ends. At the high school, the problem with searching for each student is "down to help. We do not have it," he said.

Committee Chairman Joseph Nedrow re-emphasized his opposition to widespread policies, and said the root of the problem is not unexcused absences, but a student who is habitually absent from school. He suggested administrators use the computer system to analyze which students are continually absent and when, and determine why that student would "rather be anywhere else than in school. I much rather deal with individuals than a general policy." Member Barbara Bliss agreed a better policy would be to make a positive statement to students, rather than negative. "If a student is absent, let's assume he is sick. We don't need the phone call," she said.

There was also some discussion about how the school could assure that students stay in school once they arrive. Although no options could be determined viable, committee members discussed the possibility of chaining a student parking lot to ensure they don't drive away during school hours. They also discussed assigned seating at the cafeteria. No options were endorsed.

Committee members decided students should not be academically punished if their parents fail to contact the school. They decided to eliminate the requirement of a telephone call. They also requested that town counsel review the school's liability for students who do not show up at school.

They concluded that students will not be allowed to make-up classroom work without a legitimate excuse for the absence. School officials must require a written note the day the student returns, but a telephone call the day of the absence will not be mandatory.

Financial Manager Stephen Hart explained Cohasset High School does not have a chronic absenteeism rate, noting the school averaged an annual 97 percent attendance rate.

Cohasset family welcomes new AFS student

A new family member will arrive this summer on the doorstep of the Mary Beth and William Lean family. Carine Nicole Mortiaux of Namur, Belgium will spend a year in Cohasset, attending Cohasset High School, while living with the Leans.

The Leans and Carine have been brought together through AFS International/Intercultural Programs. AFS, which is active in 70 countries, is the leading nonprofit international exchange organization.

Carine, 17, is interested in music. She plays the piano and the flute and sings in a choir. She also enjoys a number of sports, including swimming, tennis, skiing and bicycling. Her father, Alain, is a doctor. Her mother, Christiane, is a homemaker. Her American "dad" works for the Kendall Company. Her "mom" is a vocational counselor at the Boston School for the Deaf. Carine will have two new siblings in Susannah and Bill.

"The Leans and the Cohasset community are demonstrating their commitment to building bridges of international understanding by welcoming Carine into their lives and hearts," notes William M. Dyal, Jr., president of AFS International.

The Cohasset chapter is run by local volunteers who are the foundation of AFS. They are responsible for recruitment, selection and support of participants; and for fundraising which helps to sustain AFS's diverse programs.

The AFS idea originated with the American Field Service volunteer ambulance drivers who served in World Wars I and II and who later established an international exchange program for secondary school students in an effort to promote global peace, understanding, and friendship. Since 1947, over 140,000 students and an equal number of families have formed a global community through the AFS experience.

Further information on AFS can be obtained by contacting local AFS representatives or by calling AFS in New York through its toll free number: 800-AFS-INFO.

☐ As most people know, Jan and Dick Brown moved three or so weeks ago, California bound. Jan had just completed her third year of medical school at Boston University, and received an award that cannot go unmentioned! Jan won the Esther B. and Albert Cahn Scholarship Award, an award that is voted on by both classmates and faculty at the end of third year medical school. This is an award that is presented to the student who has completed his or her third year and demonstrated to the teachers and peers devotion to the medical profession and concern and compassion for her patients. We certainly take our hats off to Jan, and if you wish to send congratulations to her their new address is: 718 Ironbark Court, Orinda, California, 94563.

☐ It is almost time for the Seventh Annual Jimmy Fund Tournament! This year's date is set for Monday, Sept. 24, with a 1 p.m. shot gun start. The fee this year is $40, which includes Greens fees, dinner, food and drink on course and the famous raffle table (prizes this year are going to be worth around $6,000 to $8,000). Applications may be obtained from Bob Magner, Clark Chatterton, Bernie Muchahy, Rocco Laugelle, or Paul Fiori. . .

Artist Richard Loud and the woman who commissioned the painting, Priscilla Dresser, proudly display the art work in front of the Historical Society's Caleb Lothrop House. (Chris Pierce)

Art work created for Lothrop House

It has been the intent of the Cohasset Historical Society to preserve the Caleb Lothrop House for future generations to appreciate.

Only through the generous donations of others has this been possible. Throughout the Summer Street home, furnishings and accents have been provided by donors, many in memory of their descendents who once lived in Cohasset. Society President Connie Parker has insisted the home be maintained in the style and flavor of 1823 when the structure was originally built.

"I didn't want a lot of clutter," she explained this week. "I wanted furnishings that would be stylish, and in the same time period as the Lothrop House."

This week, the society was presented with one donation which "overwhelmed" the society president. It is an original oil painting of Cohasset Harbor, 1898.

The work which hangs over the livingroom fireplace, was commissioned specifically for the Lothrop House by Joy Place residents Norman and Priscilla Dresser. They requested that Quincy marine artist Richard Loud complete the work.

Parker and Dresser discussed the painting this week, and the events which led to its creation. Members of the historical society, the Dressers decided to give something that would stand as a memorial to their entire family. The Dressers have three sons.

Mrs. Dresser's brother-in-law lives in Florida, and told her about a beautiful painting he had viewed. It was two Cup Defenders, and her brother-in-law, an art buff, called her to say the talented artist lived in Quincy.

"'You really ought to look him up,' my brother-in-law said to me. So we gave him a call. This was about three years ago. He brought the painting my brother-in-law was so impressed with to our home, and it was really beautiful. He's had many exhibits in the Peabody Museum and in Mystic, Conn.," Dresser explained.

She and her husband thought an original painting by this artist would make a special and unique gift for the Lothrop House. They asked Loud to create a scene depicting Cohasset Harbor during

The Law and You

by Richard Price, Attorney-at-Law

The Pre-Trial Settlement Conference

When a personal-injury suit gets near the top of the trial list, it then will have a judge assigned to it. The first step he will take is to call the opposing lawyers into his chambers for a "pre-trial settlement conference". The judge will not so much be concerned with the merits of the case as he will be in finding how far apart you are from the other side. He will determine if, through his intervention, a compromise can be reached. The judge and the court system recognize that personal-injury suits are primarily private matters. They do not have the same impact on public security that criminal cases have. As a result, it is better if they can be settled and not tie up a public courtroom. The office of Law Offices Of Richard Price is pleased to bring you this weekly feature as a public service with the hopes of increasing your knowledge and awareness of your legal rights. If you have any questings regarding the law and how it may be affecting you I invite you to call 383-9882. My office is conveniently located at 760 Chief Justice Cushing Hwy., Rt. 3A, Cohasset. I am available daily by appointment.

HINT

If there is still disagreement at the end of a pre-trial conference, the judge will set a trial date.

Summer thoughts

This town has been strangely quiet for the past week. The dog days of August have arrived.

It is business as usual for many of the town committees and boards, although many have cancelled meetings while members enjoy a well-deserved vacation.

Before the action gears up for fall, before school reopens Sept. 3 and committees look toward another special town meeting, life is relaxed and business is all but forgotten.

We don't wish to rush the conclusion of these long, lingering days of summer. We wish they would hang on for a while. Let's not forget the beautiful days we had, while this winter we are fighting colds, traffic, and the onslaught of wet, damp snow.

Some like the winter, mainly because of the sports associated with that time of the year. Some people hate the humidity of summer. Let's compromise and say that fall and spring are the most likeable times of the year.

Autumn in Cohasset is cloudless, regal blue skies. The many-shaded leaves on the trees are clearly outlined by the lustrous sky behind them. The air smells clean. We want to walk briskly, stroll with our young, pick red apples, and never turn our thoughts to the darkening clouds threatening the approach of winter.

Spring is the smell of wet, warm air settled upon the warming earth. The wind is wild, and the rain is terminal.

Through the dampness that invades our spirit, we sense the apprehensive arrival of hope. The days are growing longer and brighter. From the ceaseless rain grow green buds of life. We are awakened from our winter sleep and we feel the urgency of life around us.

Summer will soon be here. Hot, steamy, blinding bright days that beg for frivolity and friendship. There is no time for serious toil. This is a season of enjoyment - a sense that summer is carefree and too brief to ignore.

The last days of summer are approaching once again. As a cycle is endless, so are the seasons that leave us too soon.

As children, we watch impatiently for the calendar page to be turned, for the next day to greet us. As we grow older, days rush into one, the blanket of night covers us too hastily. Years are inseparable, and we want them to stop their advance.

Just some thoughts to fill an August day.

'A valuable lesson every minute'

By Claire McDonough

"You were right," the Dragon told me.

I looked up, startled, "I was?"

He nodded. "Remember when Skip wanted to insure his car? And I said he should wait, in the interest of everyone's mental health, and you said letting a teenager have a car can be a valuable tool in teaching responsibility?"

"I remember," I told him. "You said he should get it road-ready before he insured it, because once it was insured the clock would start and he would only have seven days to get it inspected. You said once it was in shape, it could be insured within a day. Right?"

"Right," he repeated. "But you very helpfully pointed out that he had phoned his friend who works in a garage, and told him everything that was wrong with the car. The friend told him that he could have it fixed within a day, but he had to have it insured before he could drive it to the garage. Then he would have the responsibility of taking care of the repairs."

"So?" I asked, "is there anything wrong with that?"

"Not in principle," the Dragon replied. "I started his lessons in responsibility by loaning him the money for his insurance.

"Then I paid for a tank of gas so he could drive it to the garage and get the essentials taken care of."

"Sounds good to me," I murmured. "Did the garage take care of the essentials?"

"If you consider a tape deck and stereo with quadrophonic speakers the essentials, they did."

"Is that all he had done?" I asked.

The Dragon thought for a minute. "I believe he also bought a pair of fuzzy dice.

"He's been using the car every day since then to get himself to and from work. And to go out every evening."

"Do you think he'll meet the deadline for inspection?" I asked.

"I had hoped he would," the Dragon replied. "I bought him a muffler, and I paid for the tape deck, stereo and a headlight. But in the interests of teaching him responsibility, I made him buy the fuzzy dice himself.

"The problem is, now the car's developed cross-over trouble, and it looks like the entire exhaust system will have to be replaced. I made an appointment to have it done Monday."

"How did he talk you into doing that?" I inquired.

"He told me there's a toll-free number kids can use to report their parents if they don't help them fix their cars. It sounded like something you'd believe, and I guess I've been living with you too long."

"How much is it going to cost?" I wondered out loud.

The Dragon sighed. "Roughly the same amount I paid for my brand new Chevy."

"Honey," I reminded hm gently, "that was 1961."

"I know," he sighed, "but it'd buy a lot of lunches at Angelo's."

"Well," I told him, "I'm sorry about all these problems, but there was no reason for you to be sarcastic. I was being perfectly sincere when I told you this would be a valuable tool for teaching Skip responsibility."

He shook his head. "Who's being sarcastic? And who's talking about Skip?

"I'm the one who's learning a new valuable lesson every minute."

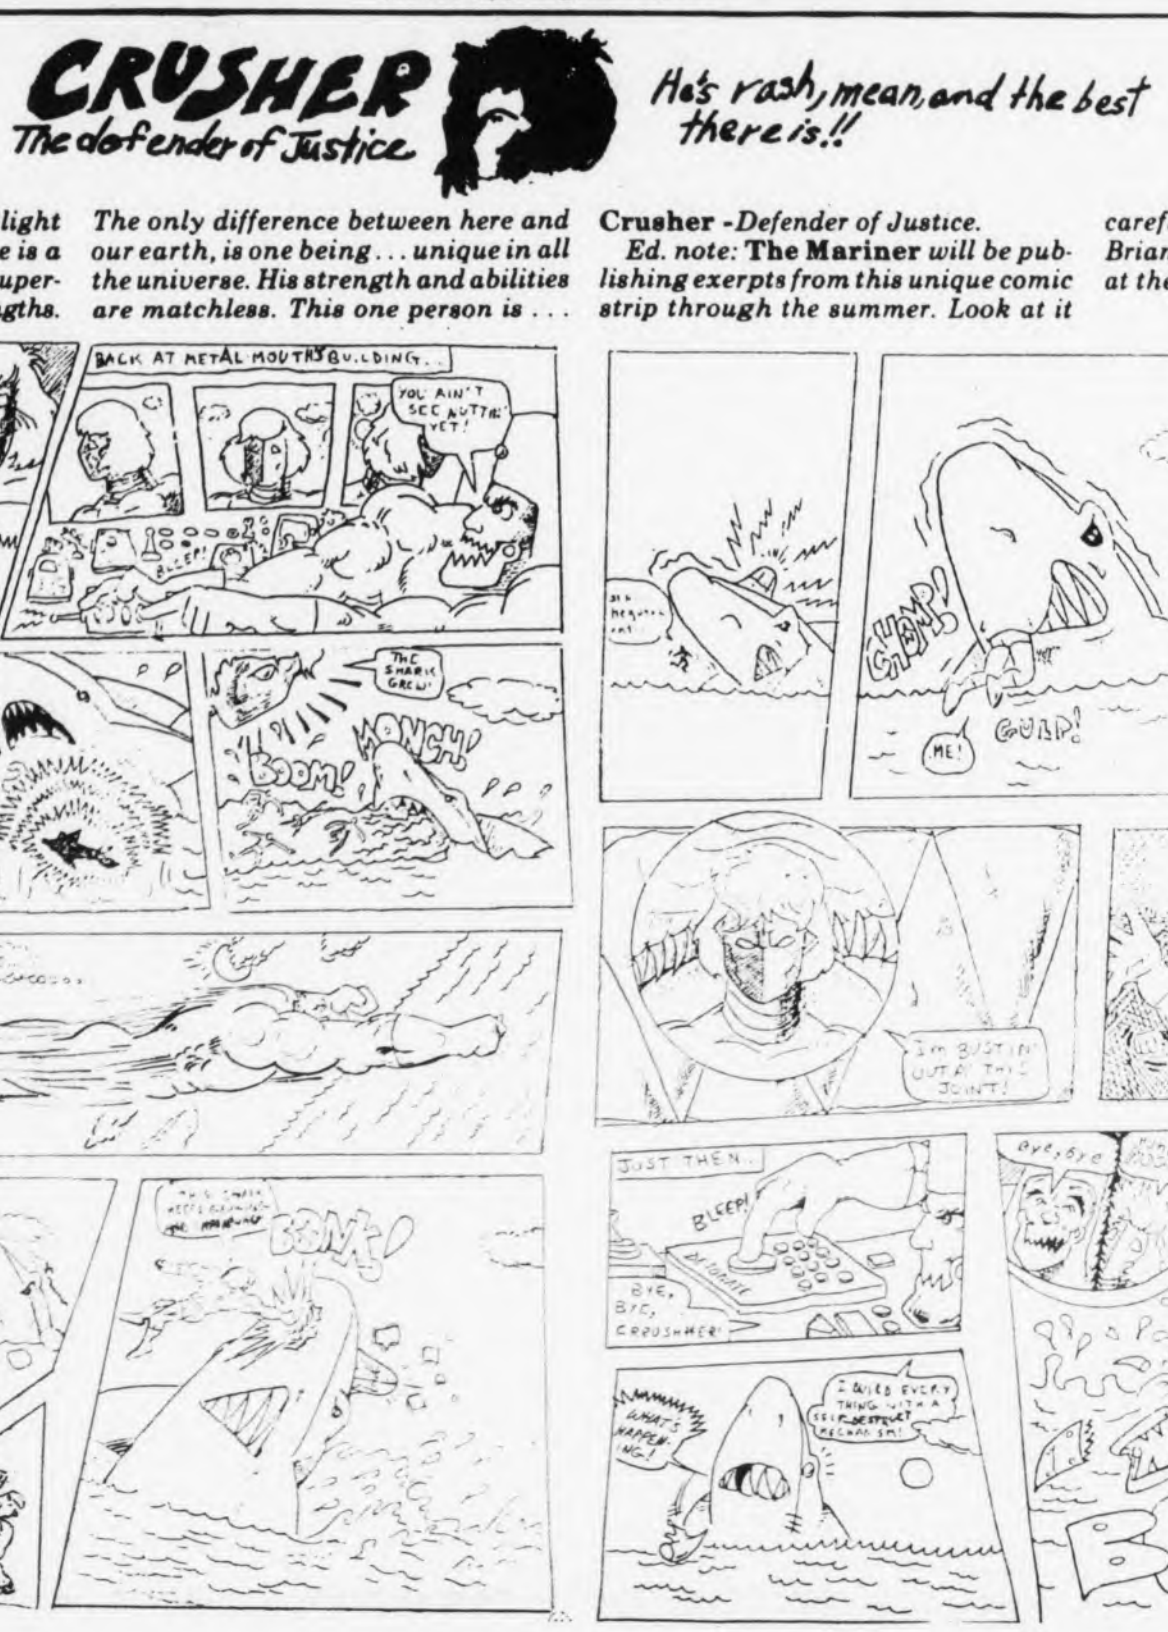
Report from the State House

Whether it be the repeal of the surtax, funding of public pension systems or mail-in voter registration, Massachusetts Citizens have the power under the State Constitution to propose their own laws through the initiative process. Probably one of the most recognized initiative petitions was the 1980 property tax-cutting Proposition 2 1/2.

The process of initiating a petition is one that requires attention to strict wording guidelines, time deadlines, and an incredible mobilization of manpower to obtain the required number of signatures to get the issue on the ballot.

Aug. 7 is the deadline that any group attempting this process must meet in order to make the 1986 ballot, by filing the proposal with the Attorney General's office. The petitions must include the complete text of the proposed laws and each must be signed by 10 registered voters with accompanying certification from registrars. The Attorney General then reviews the documents and decides whether the question is a valid one to be placed before the voters.



To be valid, the question may not have appeared on the statewide ballot in the previous two biennial elections and must conform to the State Constitution, which specifically disallows matters relating to religion, judges, courts and certain provisions of the bill of rights.

If the question is judged to be an appropriate question for voters, the Attorney General then writes a summary of the issue which will be included on the petitions. The petitions must then be signed by three percent of the total vote cast in the last state election 61,508 certified voters. No more than one fourth of the signers can come from any one county.

The petitions must be filed with city and town registrars for certification in November and then forwarded to the Secretary of State's office by December 1.

The Massachusetts Legislature may then act on the petition, enacting it into law without it being remanded to voters. If legislators reject the initiative or fail to act on it by May, the sponsors can then go back to the voters and get an additional 10,252 signatures to put the question on the 1986 ballot.

Nobody ever said the process was easy! Passing laws takes a great deal of patience, effort and perseverence. The obvious way is for legislators to do the legislating. Occasionally, however, legislators fail to act appropriately. The alternatives available to the voters are to vote for someone else in the next election, or to take the lawmaking process into your own hands by initiating a petition drive. Both are effective ways to achieve results.

August with its Sturgeon Moon brings into full bloom ripening corn, early goldenrod, wild asters and lacy-leafed yarrows. Days may be hot, buggy and muggy, but why is our magnificant full moon named after a fish? A peek in the dictionary tells of an ugly food fish from whose roe caviar is made and from whose bladder, isinglass. Hardly romantic, but probably a holdover from the days when the Indians roamed these fields and woods.

Another old expression is our way of saying that anyone who has the knack of making plants do well, has a "green thumb."This expression originated in old Scotland, where farmers were seen to have green thumbs because they handled so many green pots, the stain from which colored their thumbs. It is not an oversimplification to say that those who really love plants and gardens are born with green thumbs — for plants, children, as well as adults and animals do respond to love.

Traffic was backed up on Rte. 3A one fine summer's day as Jeremiah and Lucy led their gaggle of geese home to Mary's after a day on the North River marshes. Jane Duffey, Mary William's daughter, said that the two geese they acquired almost 20 years ago are now patriarchs of a flock of about 20. Included are a few wild Canada geese who apparently prefer living here: Some, born and bred on the River, have never seen Canada. So many people feed them at the boat livery and in other parts of town where what some refer to as "35-pound pigeons" have settled in, that they have forsaken their natural diet of grass and seaweed, preferring popcorn and bread crumbs. In New York where beaches and parks are being overrun with geese, they have become so bold that they snatch food from picnickers, invade private pools, halt traffic and nip at the heels of bicyclists. Geese number in the thousands in Greenwich, Conn. but their park superintendent says they cannot be harmed or moved because they are protected by the U. S. Migratory Bird Act of 1918.

Another puzzlement is the expression: "Happy as a clam," and one wonders just how happy that is. Perhaps deliriously so now that digging on our flats is taboo due to the red tide. According to a Princeton University study, a clam has good reason to be happy because studies show that the bands one finds on a clamshell correspond to the rings found in a tree trunk and can be used to determine the clam's age. Assuming they are not put into a chowder, researchers have discovered that clams live as long as 150 years — something to giggle about.

The former F. Samuel Hatch estate built in 1800 and now home to the Fred Frazees, has some magnificent trees on the grounds leading down to the North River. One is a cork tree believed to have been planted in 1934 and to be one of a kind in this area, as cork trees are native to southern Europe and northern Africa. With its thick, spongy outer bark and gnarled trunk that is at least four feet in diameter, the huge tree is part of a family that goes back to ancient times. Pliny tells of the use of cork for stoppers, floats for nets and inner soles of shoes.

Abbot Campbell resigns post

At a recent dinner at Glastonbury Abbey, more than 400 businessmen and professionals attended, including (l to r) Brother Thomas, prior of Glastonbury, Warren Noble of Noble's Camera Shop, Rep. Mary Jeanette Murray, and Dr. Barry Tufts.

After 28 years as superior of Glastonbury Abbey, the Benedictine Monastery in Hingham, Abbot Edward C. Campbell, OSB, has retired by submitting his resignation to Abbot Jerome Hanus, OSB, the Abbot-President of the Swiss American Congregation. Abbot Edward journeyed to Conception Abbey in Missouri to submit his resignation.

"The Abbot-President and his council, acknowledging most gratefully Abbot Edward's many years of service and his great accomplishments, have accepted his resignation to be effective on Aug. 1, 1985, which is also Abbot Edward's 60th birthday," announced Bro. Thomas O'Connor, OSB, the Prior of Glastonbury Abbey. "The monks of the Abbey are most grateful to Abbot Edward for his years of leadership and guidance," Prior Thomas continued. "We will never be able to adequately thank him for all he has done to establish this monastery and make of it a place of hospitality and prayer for all."

"Abbot Edward has been on sabbatical since last September. He will continue this time away from the monastery for rest and renewal which he truly deserves after all these years," added Bro. Thomas who has been superior in Fr. Edward's absence. "The future will see Abbot Edward serving the Church and the Order with his well-known warmth and compassion.

As a young, newly-ordained Benedictine priest, Fr. Edward Campbell arrived in Hingham when the monastery was merely two years-old. He was appointed the superior by the late Abbot Richard Felix, OSB, of St. Benedict's Abbey in Benet Lake, Wisconsin, the monastery which founded Glastonbury. In 1973 Glastonbury was raised to the status of Abbey and the community elected Fr. Edward to be the first Abbot. On June 4, 1973, Humberto Cardinal Medeiros led the ceremonies of blessing the new Abbot.

Long active in civic and legislative affairs, Abbot Edward developed subsidized housing for the elderly and the disabled. His efforts gave birth to the Lincoln School Apartments in downtown Hingham. Owned and operated by Glastonbury Abbey, the Lincoln School Apartments provide low-cost, attractive housing for more than 60 residents. Abbot Edward has also been for many years the chaplain of the Hingham Police Department. He has worked with the Red Cross, the Council on Aging, the Hingham Housing Authority, and many other local service agencies.

The Glastonbury Community will be meeting within the month with Abbot-President Jerome Hanus, OSB, to begin the process of electing a successor to Abbot Edward.

EXERCISING GOOD JUDGEMENT

Hardly anyone ever suspects a dance floor or exercise mat as the scene of a possible accident. We usually think of roads and highways as being the most likely places for back and neck injuries to occur as the result of an accident. Many people, however, take to the exercise floor without the proper knowledge and supervision to ensure a safe exercise regiment. For instance, a sit-up should never be attempted without first bending the knees. Improperly done, this exercise imparts high stress to the spine and can lead to problems. Even a relatively healthy teenager could encounter back problems this way. Before starting an exercise program, consult a chiropractor abouth the condition of your back and the proper way to exercise.

Understanding how the body bends and moves is helpful in appreciating how to avoid potential problems. The science of chiropractic deals with points of interference along the spinal column which prevents Mother Nature's natural healing instructions to be transmitted. By the application of chiropractic techniques such points of interference are eliminated and a natural healing process takes place. For attention to existing problems as well as an understanding of preventive measures to be taken, call the Cohasset Chiropractic Office, 760 Chief Justice Cushing Hwy., Suite 12, for an appt. Tel. 383-1211, 383-1214.

A look at special education in trouble

By Judi Barrett

To the extent that the state's special education law mandates instruction in a "regular" setting for most handicapped children, there are some who are simply determined to be unable to profit from an integrated education. Whether those determinations are based soundly or not is an issue for another time; in practice, a certain number of children are placed in what are bureaucratically dubbed "substantially separate programs." Housed in school buildings where the "normal" are educated, socialized, trained and nurtured, these programs constitute the bulk of placements statewide for children whose disabilities are serious enough to warrant day-long services in specialized settings.

For eight towns clustered from Marshfield to Plymouth, these programs fall under the auspices of the Pilgrim Area Collaborative: it is our regional special education consortium, and it functions to help us stay in the black while providing admittedly expensive, individualized services to over 150 students.

The Pilgrim Area Collaborative is in trouble. It is in trouble on a number of points, if not legally (yet), then for reasons as compelling and serious but a bit less tangible. Everyone involved in the current turmoil knows that, loosely, "something has to be done." But this "something"' is so undefined and undirected that one has the distinct impression that the towns involved, their school committees, their administrators, have little to no energy left to rise to the occasion.

Central to the present confusion is the lack of an executive director, and the several years worth of history that led to last week's resignation (complete with a $12,000 incentive to do so) of the director who'd been in place since the fall of 1979. The sudden vacancy of this position comes in the midst of the Collaborative board approving the start-up of six new programs for the fall and serious questions about whether space exists to house them. Marshfield's capacity to cover Collaborative space needs is saturated, and no other town has bothered to come up with meaningful offers to share the burden. As a result, the Collaborative board has found itself in the position where looking at sites outside its district is necessary.

Add to this the likelihood that PAC lacks enough specialist staff to meet the scope of services outlined in children's educational plans, the uncertainty of where new programs will be put and no one in charge to oversee relocations, the unavailability of office space to house executive and business office functions, and an emotionally drained and overworked faculty and staff, and you have somewhat of a picture of the state of things at the Collaborative. In addition, there are new teachers and classroom aides to hire, with no professional on board to screen and interview applicants, and handle the paperwork end of all that must be done to ready the Collaborative for the opening of school in September.

Unable to agree on an interim director's compensation last week, the board found itself with no temporary administration. The woman asked to fill in and keep the operation afloat pending a permanent hiring said she'd happily take the job responsibilities on - but for pay equal to what the recently resigned director was paid. The board said "no," and she, in turn, rejected their lesser offer. The rest of the meeting can only be described as stormy, confusing, and the picture of an educational institution struggling not to crumble.

Dare I say it, but I must . . . were this a program for non-handicapped children, the leadership vacuum that has now been created would never have been allowed to happen. Were this a program for non-handicapped children, the school committee (in place of the board of directors) would not be clamoring for space outside its district. A building principal wouldn't ever tell the parents of a regular education student that, "We're sorry, your child cannot come here because we have no classroom for him."

Space would be found, if not in an outright vacant classroom, then by using existing space more efficiently. All the towns involved here have an excuse for their failure to avail space: rising student enrollments in Duxbury, the potential for significant rises in enrollments in Kingston in a few years as over 700 homes on the drawing boards may well materialize. Kingston, in fact, has six known vacant classrooms but chooses, in the words of their superintendent, to be disinterested in providing that space for Collaborative use at this time. So, the Collaborative board is now trying to figure out how to legally transfer children to an empty Hanover school building - Hanover not being a member town. Against the backdrop of Department of Education advice that moving any but 3 and 4-year-old students may not be possible unless the Collaborative can justify that transition for reasons other than lack of space, the stability of an educational climate for 150 highly vulnerable, exploitable children is in serious jeopardy.

The stability at issue here is not just because of the classroom space and its inaccessibility to children who have a legal right to it. It stems from the wearing down of staff people over a long period of time, at the lack of leadership that has pervaded Collaborative management for a period that would never have been tolerated in a regular education facility, and the apparent signals from some Collaborative towns that they're not too sure they're going to remain part of this venture much longer. But as long as they are a part of it, these member towns and the people they designate to serve on the board have got to come to grips with their responsibility toward these kids. And kids, I might add, who are ill-equipped to make the noise their unimpaired peers would over intolerable conditions. They haven't got student councils, football heros, class yearbooks and the myriad amenities that go along with being a "normal" kid in a "normal" school.

The eight towns in this district have got to decide whether they have the energy and commitment left to keep this Collaborative going. Although special education consortiums such as this one are almost universally plagued with the problems that emanate from collective ownership, this Collaborative is known, and has been for some time, as one that is especially riddled with management and program difficulties. With six weeks left til school opens and no office (let alone an administrator) for parents to call after next week, with nothing confirmed about where the 1985-86 programs will be sited and at what cost, with the screening and hiring of a dozen or more positions to complete, and with the securing of state approval necessary to relocate some children who need to be housed in space that may not exist, there is too much for a volunteer board to handle - and a board that periodically becomes embroiled in feuds and power plays.

It is a board that seems totally unaware of the crisis situation its programs are in, and it is a board that cannot absolve itself of responsibility for some of what has gone sour with the management of its operation. The executive director is gone; he is no longer an excuse. When the board can't muster a quorum to deal with urgent business (such as what happened July3) something is wrong; and what's wrong is an attitude problem.

If the board can't mobilize its resources and start dealing with reality, if it cannot handle responsibly the education of handicapped children that no one seems to want in their schools (save for Marshfield, that has shouldered the entire burden in the last several years), then it may be time for the state Dept. of Education to step in and start making some decisions instead.

Ch. 766 was put in place to protect children from precisely the types of attitudes and treatment that now seem to prevail in the Collaborative communities. It is the Department of Education's responsibility to see that the law is carried out - not just to the letter, but for its intent. At the root of the Collaborative's ailments is discrimination, because if school committees in these towns think their obligations begin and end with paying tuition to place what are euphemistically classified as "low-incidence" children out-of-sight-out-of-mind programs, they are missing the point.

Marshfield has given what it could to PAC; it's about time everyone else started giving more than money.

Public safety center

Ground was broken today for the new Plymouth County Public Safety Training Center and Sheriff's Headquarters bringing with it according to Sheriff Peter Y. Flynn, "a promise of better trained public safety officers and a more efficient countywide public safety operation."

Speaking before a crowd of more than 100 state, county, and local elected officials and members of the law enforcement and public safety fields, Flynn said the training center "is the most exciting development in the area of public safety for the county in decades."

Said Flynn, "I can remember filing legislation while serving in the Massachusetts House of Representatives for the construction of a county public safety training center. The legislation passed but, with the imposition of Proposition 2½, it never got built. After taking over the office of Sheriff, I decided to continue my dream of getting the structure built especially because of the obvious need for it. Today, that dream begins to take shape."

Flynn praised the Plymouth County Commissioners for their support in getting the building built, Boston Edison for underwriting the construction cost of the structure and the Massachusetts Legislature for including money in the budget for the operation of the training center.

Joining Flynn at the groundbreaking were members of Governor Dukakis' Administration, the Massachusetts State Senate and House of Representatives, the Plymouth County Commissioners, local elected town officials, representatives of Boston Edison, representatives of the state civil defense and members of local police and fire departments.

The building, to be constructed at the cost of $1.2 million dollars, will be a colonial style two-story brick veneer structure with a gable roof and trim. It was designed by the architectural firm of Kenneth Parry & Associates of Weymouth, and has been contracted to Stone & Webster of Boston. It is expected to be completed by early 1986.

Switch is on - companies seek employees

By Don Merrill

"Excuse me, sir, but are you looking for a job opening?"

That quote from a supervisor at an area company is an example of the aggressiveness with which South Shore employers are seeking workers.

More than 25 firms, including many of the region's biggest companies, were represented at a five-hour Job Fair at Hanover Mall last Friday.

Organizing officials said the participating companies had 500 to 700 openings to fill as soon as possible.

"Lots of companies on the South Shore are having problems filling positions," said Terry Fancher, who is business and transportation manager for the Quincy-based South Shore Chamber of Commerce.

Most of the positions touted at the fair involve part time or seasonal work, Fancher said.

The largest number of openings — 200 — is available on a seasonal basis at Wear-Guard Corp. of Norwell. Wear-Guard now has about 800 employees, according to Joan Allen of the company's personnel department.

Allen said the Hanover Mall fair, and one held at Cordage Park Marketplace in Plymouth last spring, are ideal for finding the right people to fill job openings at Wear-Guard.

"I've taken in over 100 applications and invited many more to take a tour of the company," she said.

September to December is a busy period for the company, so workers are needed in all departments to deal with the increased sales volume, she said. Company officials were also taking applications for "about 15" permanent part-time positions at Wear-Guard.

Since many vacant positions are part time or seasonal, employers targeted those not now in the workforce — students and women with small children, for example -- for the positions, according to Ed Cafferty, executive director of the South Coastal Private Industry Council, one of the fair's co-sponsors.

"The area's unemployment rate is now 3.8 percent, which is very low even though some have already been laid off at the General Dynamics shipyard in Quincy," Cafferty said. "Some say that rate reflects full employment in the population, due to the way statistics are kept.

"We hope to attract people back into the labor force — those not working now who are interested in a second family income," he added.

Fancher said Hanover Mall was ideal for that objective because the companies were "going to where the potential workers are."

"We were originally going to hold the fair at a Hanover elementary school, but we wouldn't have gotten people to go there on a sunny, warm summer day," Fancher said. "You have to go where the potential workers are, and they're here at the mall."

The fair was sponsored by participating companies, the Chamber of Commerce, Private Industry Council, Hanover Mall Mercants Association and the Plymouth and Hanover Job Matching centers of the state Division of Employment Security.

Ken Vining, manager of the Job Matching centers, said the fair wouldn't reduce either the number of people seeking jobs, or the number of listings provided by employers, at any of the centers.

'We need the applicants, and that's why we're here," he said, pointing out three tables where area residents could sign up for the free job-matching service. "The companies have plenty of openings now — they can't wait until September to fill them."

Vining said most of the openings at participating companies should be filled as a result of the job fair. "I'd be disappointed if we had less than 500 jobs filled," he said.

Wear-Guard's Allen said her company hoped to fill most of its openings after the fair. "It's a good way to get large numbers of applicants," she said.

The jobs promoted at the Hanover Mall fair were diverse. The companies were looking for warehouse help, cashiers, bank tellers, accounting clerks, housekeepers, temporary clerical workers, technicians, secretaries, drivers and custodians, among others.

Rockland Trust Co. Vice President Jeanne Muncey of Hanover said her firm needs part-time tellers in the bank's Marshfield, Pembroke, Hanover Mall and Bridgewater branches, as well as clerks and secretaries for its main offices in Rockland.

"I hope to get all of these positions filled soon," she said.

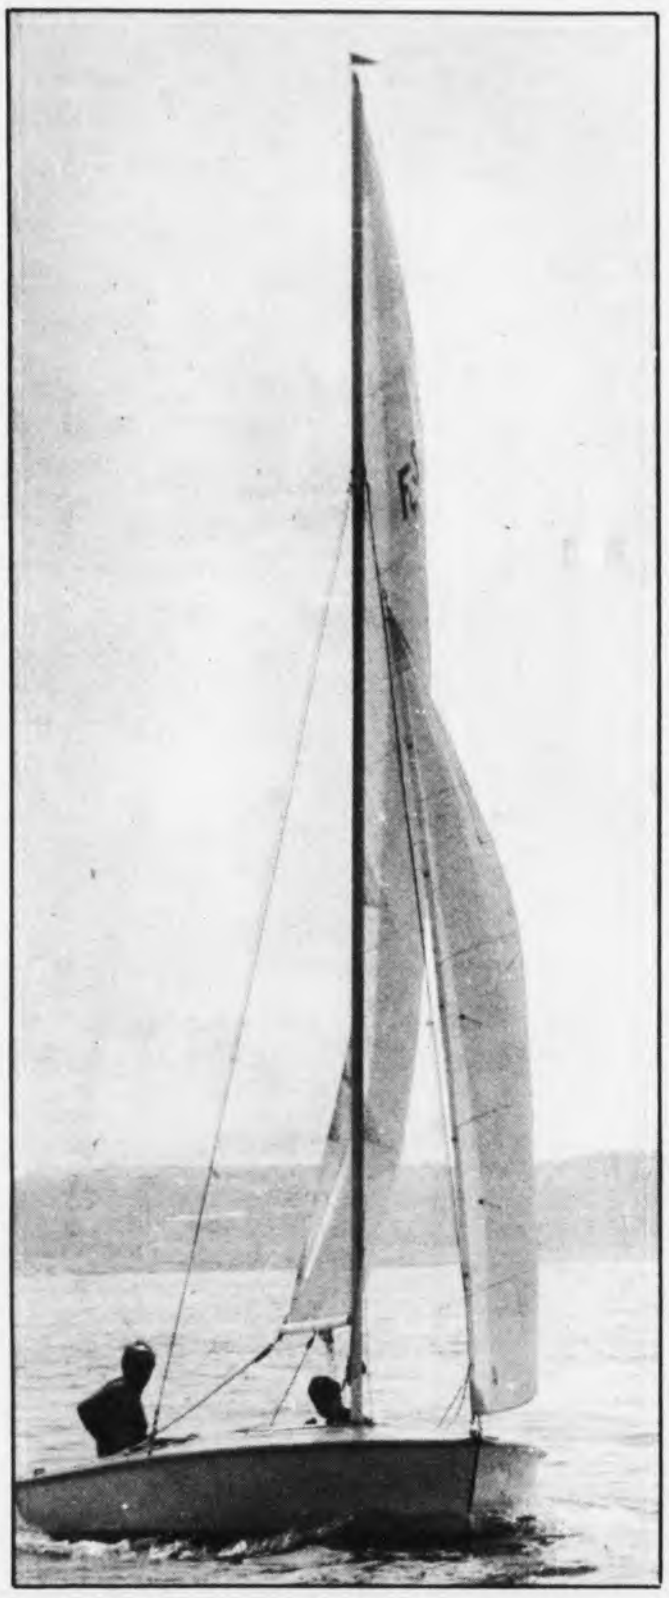
Thanks to the job fair, Muncey's hope may become reality. Anne Travi, Rockland Trust assistant treasurer, said she had been "overwhelmed" by inquiries throughout Friday morning.

"I didn't stop for two and a half hours — they just kept coming," she said.

Travi said the job fair was in ideal way to attract workers who might not otherwise apply for openings at Rockland Trust. "Some are afraid to pound the pavement (looking for work), but they'll speak to us here. I think this is a wonderful way to find new applicants."

Muncey said more than 50 people had submitted applications four hours into the job fair.

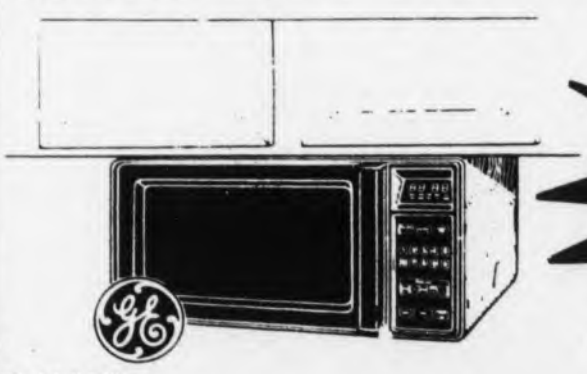
Representatives of The Patriot Ledger in Quincy were looking for clerical and data-entry help, drivers, a customer-service representative and a personnel assistant. Cyndi Papile of the Ledger's human-resources department said in addition to those who completed employment applications last week, many people had taken them home to submit by mail.



"We'll be calling several applicants back today and Monday to set up interviews," Papile said.

One young man was looking for applicants interested in his company's stockbroker training program, possibly the most unique opportunity available at the fair.

"I came down on my own. Our company wants to open 100 new offices in the coming year," said Wayne F. Sullivan, a registered representative of First Investors Corp., a New York brokerage firm with offices in Hingham.



Sullivan said First Investors is constantly growing and needs greater numbers of brokers as it expands. The firm has opened 170 offices across the country in the past four years, he said.

"I'm looking for people with some college or work experience" for the three-month training program. Though future brokers aren't paid during training, Sullivan said the career offers a very high potential salary.

Heading toward the finish mark during Saturday's Flying Scot race are these hearty sailors. (Carol McCann)

Victorian estate converted to Cohasset condos

For nine years, the large Victorian homestead sat vacant behind overgrown bushes and trees. Passers-by saw the outline of a large home, once magnificent, now decayed beyond recognition.

Today, that home has become a showplace for all to view. The weeds and dead trees have been replaced by a plush green lawn and selected bushes and prized flowers have been carefully planted in a plush pattern.

What was once an admired home, will again welcome inhabitants. Country Condominiums on Beechwood Street is just about complete.

Purchased by Country Associates Trust of Newton in 1984, the owners have met the town's stringent demands, and construction is almost finished. A few decorative touches here and there will be added this week as Harmony Hill opens its doors to officials and guests this weekend.

Norman Kaufman of Country Associates Trust is the man who envisioned converting the vacant, decrepid building into unique, spacious and marketable housing units. Admitting a developer must work towards a profit, Kaufman notes that projects such as Harmony Hill are also labors of love.

Inside this roomy building, are elegant touches reminiscent of Victorian living. The visitor feels welcomed, comfortable, yet impressed by the sophisticated blend of old and new decor.

Kaufman explains that the architect, Ralph LeBlanc of Hull worked deliberately to achieve that balance of contemporary living with a Victorian flair. Kaufman, LeBlanc, and Arthur Roberts of Country Associates, spent many hours pondering the things that would remain, and the touches that would be added to the condominium.

What they have achieved are five distinct housing units, tied together with common features such as fireplaces, stained glass, tiled floors, roomy closets, and unique trimmings around windows and doors.

When construction crews decided that porch railings and trim work would have to be ditched, architect LeBlanc found a man in Washington state who custom made redwood moldings and trims. They had special shipments forwarded to the site. The wood is so heavy and dark, crews had to paint them at least six times to blend in with the surrounding work.

The windows throughout the four-level building conform to the same size and design of the windows in the former Harmony Hill summer residence. Again, a special custom order was made, resulting in steel-framed thermopane windows displaying the same unique molding design, but with the convenience of a modern, energy efficient window.

Stained glass remained in its original location, and fireplaces were rebuilt to function as they did when the building was constructed in 1894.

Special Victorian touches, such as brass fittings in the bathrooms, solid brass railings along the stairs, and glass and brass chandeliers, are all design elements associated with that time, Kaufman explained.

Not everything is old-fashioned, according to the owners. Roberts noted that a lower level apartment (his favorite) includes a heated greenhouse-patio-livingroom. This room is the entrance, which encompasses the original granite foundation and includes a translucent glass roof. In total privacy, this homeowner will be able to sit and watch TV, surrounded by green plants and the airiness of wall-to-wall windows.

This room is adjacent to what may be described as the most unique bedroom or study in Cohasset. The room has been designed around a large boulder. What Roberts explained as "too big to blast without crumbling the home's foundation," is a massive rock which will likely be the center of attention within this apartment. The stone-room can be used for whatever the imaginative homeowner chooses. Thus far, the contractors have received hundreds of decorating suggestions from curious visitors, Kaufman stated.

Each of the one and two-bedroom units includes an inordinate amount of storage and closet space. Where eaves connect into wall space, the designers decided to use the area for closets rather than enclosing the entire area.

Each unit has individual heat pumping units and central air conditioning, and are already wired for telephone and cable television. The fire alarm system in each condo is connected into the Cohasset Fire Department. Each unit will contain a washer and dryer in individual laundry rooms, and a microwave oven in the kitchens.

Inlaid tiles have replaced worn floors throughout the kitchen areas. Individual homeowners will select their own carpeting. Italian marble will be installed in the main entrance way and as thresholds from the bathrooms into adjacent rooms.

The largest unit at Country Condominiums contains two bedrooms and two and a half bathrooms. This unit also includes an airy loft overlooking the living area. A master bedroom is located a few steps down from the living area, in what was once the servants' quarters. Decayed railings along each stairway have been replaced with ornate solid wood.

Each unit includes a private patio or porch. The flooring is solid mahogany. "It was used for many years, and stood up well on ships, so we decided it was the best material to use for the porches," Kaufman explained.

There are more than 8000 bricks within the walkway surrounding the home. More than 300 bushes and shrubs have been planted, and 40,000 square feet of grass envelops the 2.3 acres of land.

A large paved driveway is the only access to the rear of the property which is used for parking. The drive travels behind the parking area, where a garage-storage area will be located for the residents.

Roberts said the workers have received many compliments from residents once skeptical about their plans. "We've heard from literally hundreds of people, telling us how nice this place looks now," he said.

What was once used as a haven for vandals, is now a nearly-complete architectural reconstruction. Scalloped shingles remain along the eaves of the roof. The clapboards are painted in brown earth tones, with a splash of pink along the peaks of the structure.

The lillies that earlier this season graced the long front lawn have blossomed and faded. But the German strawberries that are a favorite of owner Kaufman are ripe and ready for picking in the rear of the property.

Harmony Hill is a home once again.

Cohasset school news

Summer reading list

The school committee emphasized this week that the two-book summer reading program is not mandatory, but will provide the 7-12th grade student with extra credit for the first semester.

The members also wished to clarify that some incoming ninth graders received one list when they left their eighth grade class in June, and recently received a revised list. Anyone who has already completed two books from the previous list will receive the same extra credit as those students who are selecting two books from the revised list.

Originally, the committee had approved the English Dept.'s recommendation that the two books be required summer reading. After discussing the potential problems with a required program, including eliminating all new transferees from the requirement, committee members decided the reading would serve as extra credit for those students who completed the books.

The school committee would like the summer reading program to become a tradition in the Cohasset schools.

New art teacher

Supt. Eugene Crowell recommended Colleen Lucas be appointed the new high school art teacher, but told the school committee there were seven superior candidates for the position.

Lucas, a resident of Brookline and no relation to the man she is replacing, will receive a $17,967 salary. She has a master's degree in Fine Arts, and will be a "welcomed addition to the community," according to Crowell.

The superintendent said it was a difficult task selecting one from a field of seven qualified candidates, but everyone agreed Lucas was the best choice.

The school committee approved the recommendation, adding the local arts council should be notified of the appointment.

Reform Act council

The school committee voted Monday night to create a council to oversee the distribution of state funds through the newly enacted Education Reform Act.

According to the school improvement fund section of the legislation, individual school systems will receive $10 per pupil this fiscal year in grades K-6. Next year, $8.4 million will be distributed to the state's school systems in all 13 grade levels.

The Cohasset council will include three teachers, two parents of pupils, and one other person. The council will determine how the state funds will be divided in Cohasset. Their determination is subject to approval by the school committee.

The funds may be used toward innovative academic programs, the purchase of instructional equipment, an alternative education program, a cultural education program, a business/education partnership, or staff training.

The amount of funds granted by the state will be based on the October enrollment figures presented by the school administration.

Supt. Eugene Crowell suggested that the estimated $3000 may be used to bring artist-in-residence Syma to the Osgood School, or to help implement the newly-adopted option plan for the incoming sixth grade class.

School registration

The Cohasset Public Schools will hold registration for all new students entering the system from 9 a.m. to 12 noon daily during the following dates: Monday, August 26 through Friday, August 30.

You are urged to phone for an appointment to assist in making the registration as smooth as possible: Joseph Osgood School, 383-6117, Grades K-3; Deer Hill School, 383-6115, Grades 4-6; and High School Guidance, 383-6102, Grades 7-12.

August blooms appear in nearby gardens

palmated sandpipers, least sandpipers and a few ruddy turnstones. All too soon, their migration will take them south, so the experienced birdwatcher takes along his binoculars to watch for a glimpse of those comical dowitchers with their long, straight bill probing the mud for food. The egrets, once almost extinct when their feathers were used to adorn turn-of-the-century millinery, are becoming increasingly common in our marshes as are blue herons. Another pleasant pastime for those who shun our icy waters, is gathering sea shells. Whelks come in many shapes and some are even good to eat. The Indians used whelks for wampum, shaping them into elongated beads. Shells make wonderful souvenirs for the summer visitor and a pleasing find to be treasured is a sanddollar, bleached white by the sun and up to three inches in diameter.

One way to get ideas for your own flower garden is to peek at neighboring front yeads. Perennials can still be planted for a display next year and driving along our lanes and byways one notes tall delphiniums, cleome, delphiniums and foxgloves at the back of border gardens, with salvia, coral bells and dianthus in front and in the very front of the boarder, midgets like alyssum and marigolds. On Old Main St. outside a white Cape is a striking arrangement of a border garden of neatly trimmed yews dotted with bright red geraniums; all easy to care for, but pleasing to see. Around the corner on Pleasant St., an old, gnarled apple tree is groaning with green apples, so many that its branches are touching the ground. Up on Holly Hill where so many homes are surrounded with trees, few flowers can contend with all that shade. The window boxes and tubs of impatiencethat areso delicate that they can't withstand the hot summer sun, make pretty splashes of color. Perking up a sunny roadside mailbox along the way is often done with clematis, morning glories and one on Rte. 3A is outstanding with its ring of red salvia.

At least they're not diving from the bridge. These kids lowered the chance of injury by diving from the rocks at Mill River. (Bill Quigley)

To make it as affordable and convenient as possible, HealthFirst is making this special offer: $15 for a complete back-to-school physical exam.* At this price, it's a good idea to get one even if it's not required.

Each HealthFirst facility is fully equipped and staffed with highly qualified doctors, nurses and technicians. Each is also open 7 days a week from 8:00 in the morning until 10:00 at night (Weymouth facility 8:00 AM – 8:00 PM).

So take your student to HealthFirst for a back-to-school physical exam.

*Lab tests and X-rays are additional. Offer ends October 1, 1985.

Cohasset Worship

Congregational Church

We're all justifiably proud that the Second Congregational Church has become one of the relatively few that's totally accessible to everyone, as a result of our funding of an access ramp, the elevator and the ultra-convenient rest-room facilities.

It's really a great accomplishment!

But in the process we deferred a project for helping others - people who have no UCC Church in which to worship, or whose church is struggling for survival.

Over two years ago our church voted to participate in the denomination's programs of "New Initiatives In Church Development" with a fund drive to have begun in the Spring of 1983. Because we were already embarked on the Elevator Project, it was agreed to put this on the back burner for a while.

Now it's time for us to fulfill our promise.

This, then is First Alert to an appeal that will be kicked off on Sunday, Sept. 8, and which we hope to complete successfully by the end of that month.

Between now and the Sept. 8 kick-off, we will provide more detailed information about N.I.C.D., but briefly it is a vigorous mssion effort adopted by our national church organization in 1979. Its goal is $8 million, to be used for starting 150 new UCC churches in the 1980's and helping existing churches in difficulties. Nearly 3,500 congregations have already given almost $7 million. Our Massachusetts Conference had raised over $650,000 of its $850,000 goal!

Let's help them go over the top - for others!

Painting depicts life in 1898

the 1800's, the same time the Lothrop House was constructed.

Parker knew about the idea after the artist consented to the project last winter. She agreed Cohasset Harbor, the center of all the town's activity and prosperity at that time, would be the ideal feature for a painting.

The artist, who only paints on a part-time leisurely pace, came down to the harbor and shot many photographs. He also used a photo taken from the society's 1976 calendar which includes a scene of the harbor during that era.

"He really does a lot of work before he ever gets to painting," Dresser said.

He came to the Dresser's home with the finished oil painting last week, and both she and her husband were delighted. "I really like it because the coloring is so delicate and the scene is so peaceful," she added.

"It's a peaceful picture," Parker added. "It's a wonderful reminder of the way Cohasset used to be."

It is a delicate, intricate portrait of the harbor looking from Border Street to the yacht club and the former stately residence of Wall Street Journal publisher Clarence Barron. The colors are soft shades of greens and blues, depicting ships in the calm harbor waters.

The Dressers came to Cohasset 16 years ago after living in Hingham for 21 years. Their three sons had attended Hingham schools. They bought a home here as soon as their children were on their own. "We always wanted to live in Cohasset," the former sailing enthusiast noted.

She and her husband are active members of the Historical Society, working dilgently on the ladies and house committees.

Donations are an integral part of the Lothrop House decor, according to Parker, but this was the first original commissioned specifically for the home. Most of the furnishings are valuable antiques given to the society by admiring patrons.

In fact, the Historical Society will be sponsoring a special Open House sometime this fall to showcase some of the more recent donations made to the home.

Mrs. Drexel Gibson recently donated a beautiful pewter chandelier which hangs in the elegant formal dining room. Mrs. Gibson gave that momento to the society in memory of her late mother.

Mrs. Richard Carthaus (Marcia James) of Michigan donated a custom-built bookcase in memory of her mother, Hazel James. Mrs. Carthaus' father, Robert B. James, is the Historical Society's treasurer.

"Without these generous donations, this house would be bare. These people have been kind enough to help decorate the Lothrop House in the same, tasteful manner in which it had always been maintained," Parker stated.

The entire Lothrop House will be available for public viewing at the open house at a date to be announced, she added.

A summer filled with fantasy and fun

By Dorothy Squier

Sully, (that's Alice Sullivan) was at the piano rehearsing with us. Gracie Maguire, Dorette, Maizie and I were learning a new routine to "Ballin' the Jack."

Doris, our teacher, winked at Sully, who began to vamp and then started the verse:

"Folks in Georgia about to go insane,
Since that new dance down in Georgia came,"

We were in the "Gyp" room in Daddy Reddy's big farmhouse in New Salem, at the foot of the Berkshires. Daddy had been President of the Dorothea Dix School for Stage Children and now carried on his love of the theatre by inviting children from dancing schools around Boston to spend our summers playing and filling out our skinny little bodies with fresh eggs and cream and butter and homemade raspberry jam and all the good things that Daddy spoiled us with.

We were nicely rounded out by the end of August, which was when Reunion Day for New Salem Academy was celebrated by the whole town.

We donned our best dresses and walked up to the Green and the Bandstand and cheered lustily at the ball game with the rivals from Millington. (Millington is now submerged by the Quabbin Reservoir.) We shouted with the crowd: "There may be flies on Millington, but there ain't no flies on us!"

The band concert followed and we strolled around the booths examing the quilts and afghans and homemade flaky pies and mustard pickle. Daddy bought chances for us on the afghan made of granny squares and my mother, who was housekeeper pro tem, won it.

We walked back to the house with it, had a light supper, and got ready for the show. Daddy had offered our talents for the evening entertainment, because his guests that summer were Mary Miles Minter (later of Hollywood fame), her sister Margaret and their grandmother. They were professionals from New York and were going to do the Balcony Scene from Romeo and Juliet. Mary was eleven, Margaret thirteen.

Daddy had trunks full of costumes from the old School . . . the 'mustard seed' costumes from Midsummer Night's Dream, a big wooly bear suit, tambourines, castanets . . . we had all sorts to choose from. Doris discovered four handsome clown costumes for our routine:

"First you take your partner and you hold her tight,
Then you step around the floor kind of nice and light.
. . . . . .
Stretch your lovin' arms way out in space.
Then you do the Eagle Rock with style and grace.
Put your foot way round but don't forget to bring it back.
Now that's what we call Ballin' the Jack."

The program was shaping up nicely. Marie Vernon was to sing one of Daddy's favorite songs, and Gracie Croucher would recite "Leah, the Forsaken." The show ran about an hour and a half and was to be held at the Methodist Church Hall. The footlights were kerosene lamps with shades clamped on the sides.

During rehearsals Gracie Maguire and I had fits of giggling when Mary Miles, using a chair for a balustrade, spoke: "O Romeo, Romeo! wherefor art thou Romeo?" She looked so silly with her hair done up in long rags, emoting to her sister that we couldn't stop laughing and Daddy had to send us out of the room.

We knew better than to giggle during the show and it all went off without a hitch. Grace Croucher gave a chilling performance with a blood-curdling scream at the graveyard scene. Grace was always terribly dramatic. She used to come flying through the kitchen wth her fist to her forehad crying, "Oh, God, to be falsely accused!" Mama used to laugh at her. Anyhow, the audience loved her.

The show closed with Helen McCoubrey in her "Stars and Stripes" dance number, ending with the entire cast and audience singing the "Star Spangled Banner." No one seemed to have any trouble with the song in those days.

Trunks full of costumes filled many imaginative hours.

The trio from New York went home the next weekend and we spent our closing vacation days with a new game. An ell at the back of the house had a tiny fenced balcony with a door opening from the hall outside my bedroom. We called it "the Juliet." I stood at the rail looking down in the yard at Gracie and sighed, "Ay me!"

Gracie: "She speaks; —
O speak again, bright angel! for thou art
As glorious to this night, being over my head,"

At this point a basin of water would be tipped over the rail and Gracie would fall over laughing.

Daddy said we should learn the entire play and we wouldn't think it so funny.

All too soon it was Labor Day and our lessons would begin in earnest and next year there'd be another New Salem Reunion Day and we'd put on another show with those wonderful trunks full of costumes.

The Devil Theory of Rock and Roll

Joe Viera is a resident of New Hampshire who used to work in the rock music industry. A few weeks ago he came to St. Mary's Church in Hanover to speak to a group of about 100 people. His topic was that an increasing number of rock musicians are turning teenagers to satanism and communism.

I don't believe him. I did not attend his lectures, but spoke with him later and received a fair measure of his information and conclusions. He quoted lyrics by John Lennon, whom he called a communist, and Prince, whom he said has a "Messiah complex." His style of interpretation would lead one to conclude that Milton's "Paradise Lost" and Goethe's "Faust" were written by satanists and that George Orwell was a red.

Viera also may be guilty of failing to recognize satire and not knowing when he's being kidded. For instance, he mentioned Ozzy Osbourne as a satanist rock performer and a group called "U2" as good Christians. Yet at the recent Live Aid concert Ozzy proclaimed he had been born again and said, "God bless you" after every song while "U2" played "Sympathy for the Devil."

Still it was fascinating to listen to him. Like people who search for who killed Kennedy or believe in Big Foot or UFO's, Viera provides the service of giving an explanation to the unexplanable.

The unexplanable in this case is unfortunately the difficulty teenagers have today in coming of age with a sense of purpose and integrity. Viera and I certainly agree that the pressures of kids are currently more intense and complex that they ever have been. In looking for answers they turn to their music, which too often provides them with shallow and misleading answers.

It doesn't take a genius to go to Newbury Comics in Cambridge, the area's most outrageous record store, and see some album covers with devils heads or scenes of violence and degraded sex. But to me it's just another example of how some people will go to any length to make a buck, coupled with teenagers' eternal desire to horrify parents. Why should communists direct the degregation of American culture when good, loyal Americans are perfectly capable of degrading it themselves.

Viera was careful to point out that he did not advocate censorship, but rather simply wanted kids to be aware of what they were listening to, so they could make informed choices. Fine. But history is too rife with the blood of people labeled heretics for us not to look very closely at those who accuse others in a public forum when the accused or their representatives are not present to answer the charges.

Such presentations would be much more effective if they were to take the form of an old-fashioned debate. Let a record company executive answer these charges or, if that isn't possible, even a local person skeptical of Viera would help. Matters of faith and matters of fact tend to get very blurred and if Viera presents only his point of view, teenagers who attend may be no more able to make an informed opinion than they are when listening to their radios and tapes.

The problem with the devil is that he's so convenient. Once you've named him, all you need do is kick him out of your heart or community and everything will be OK.

A 16-year-old recently asked in all seriousness if I thought rock music was evil. I replied that anything you accepted without thinking about what it was really saying had the potential to be evil, because it robbed you of free will. This is true of both rock music and Viera's criticism of it.

Of course, if my deepest beliefs were exposed to the same sort of public skepticism, they might seem pretty odd, too. But I don't expect others to see the world as I do, have no interest in converting them and, most importantly, I don't think you have to agree with someone to work with them toward common goals.

So even thought I strongly disagree with Viera's opinions, I appreciate his willingness to voice them, and I hope, to engage in constructive dialogue. The public forum of free speech is, after all, the best way to learn about ideologies and the one sure way to beat the devil.

(Darrell Berger is minister of the First Parish Unitarian Church in Scituate.)

THEATRE REVIEW

'All Night Strut' steps high

By Judith Montminy

Norwell's Nickerson Theatre has brought in just the right show for the dog days of August. "The All Night Strut!" gives South Shore theatregoers an evening of high-stepping, lively 30's and 40's hits performed in a nightclub atmosphere. Fran Charnas, who conceived, choreographed and directed the original show, has directed the Nickerson production. Three of the four cast members, Nora Cole, Steve Gideon and Gary Thompson have been members of "Strut!" companies in other cities. Even the musical director, Corey Allen, the stage manager, Carol Avery, and the lighting designer, Thom Palm, are veteran "Strut!" affiliates. It shows. The production at the Nickerson doesn't miss a beat. It's cohesive, it's well-timed, its visually on target — but more important, it's fun.

The proscenium of stage lights, the black, white and red costumes, and the black and white backdrop of the show's logo (silhouettes of one all black couple and one all white couple), along with the musicians on stage help create the cabaret atmosphere of the 30's and 40's. The four singer-dancers use microphones set downstage, enabling them to have eye contact with the audience.

The cast clearly enjoys what it is doing. And what it is doing is two acts of straight singing, jiving, and strutting. Only Bernice Wood, whose cryptic program bio leads one to believe she has not performed in a "Strut!" production before, lacks that extra ounce of pizzazz the other cast members have. Where Cole, Gideon and Thompson sparkle, Wood shines. There's a definite "Strut!" style that's been developed over the years. Perhaps it takes time for a performer to reach that level of crisp, high octane energy. Having said all this about Wood's performance, it's only fair to add that her singing voice is the strongest in the show. She is a real belter. And when she sings the love ballad, "I'll Be Seeing You," the audience is spellbound.

Working an ensemble, each performer has a turn as the lead singer of a song. Gideon's angelic tenor voice is an audience favorite in "A Nightingale Sang in Berkeley Square." Other show stoppers are "In The Mood," "I Get Ideas," "Operator," "As Time Goes By," "Fascinating Rhythm," and "It Don't Mean A Thing If It Ain't Got That Swing."

Four actors using four downstage microphones, in less capable hands, could lead to a very boring evening. Many shows, since "Strut!" appeared in Boston in 1978, have tried to imitate the intimate format but not have been as successful as Fran Charnas with "The All Night Strut!" Charnas uses every inch of her actors' bodies and moves them upstage, downstage, high and low and in between. She never lets them stop. From the minute the show starts until it's over, the four cast members are singing, bopping, and entertaining.

At the end of the show, Gideon tells the audience, "If we have been able to create a musical mood —then that's copascetic." The mood certainly has been created at the Nickerson Theatre. Yes, it's copascetic, but better than that, it's a good time, and it's right in our back yard.

"The All Night Strut!" continues through August 25. Tuesday, Wednesay and Thursday shows start at 8 p.m.; Friday at 8:30 p.m.; Saturday at 5 p.m. and 9 pm.; and Sunday at 2 p.m. and 7 p.m.

Fall class schedule at S.S. Conservatory

The fall semester at the South Shore Conservatory will begin Sept. 9. An open house will be held at the school's three branches to start off the season, and the school invites the community to meet the faculty, enjoy music and refreshments and learn about this cultural resource which is celebrating its 15th anniversary.

Open house will be held at the main Hingham school, off 19 Fort Hill St., Sunday Sept. 8 from 3 to 5 p.m.; at the Duxbury branch in the First Parish Hall on Tremont St., Wednesday, Sept. 4 from 7 to 9 p.m.. and at the Brockton branch at 325 West Elm St. in the church hall, Thursday, Sept. 5 from 7 to 8 p.m.

A free brochure is available at all branches which describes the programs and will be sent on request by calling 749-7565.

The conservatory offers lessons, private and class, for children and adults, whether beginning or advanced students. At the Hingham branch, instruction is offered on all instruments and in theory, dance, voice and drama. A carefully chosen faculty of professionals and degree-holding music educators give the instruction at the school.

Here are some of the classes especially for children.

The Conservatory Preschool offers, two, three and five-day programs with music a regular part of the schedule. Piano and violin taught by the highly acclaimed Suzuki method is available instructed by specially trained teachers; the program includes parent orientation (a parent takes part in all lessons), private instruction and group lessons.

"Music for Mom and Me" was successfully introduced this summer. Mothers with babies six months to three and one half years share folk songs, movement, poetry and singing games in an early introduction to music; classes are one half hour and divided into age groups (children's).

The Joy of Music introduces children four to seven to the process of making and understanding music through games, singing, movement and playing the special Orff instruments. Children develop rhythm, musical awareness and a good ear, which prepares them well for later music training.

Recorder class and guitar fun give basic instruction on these instruments in a small group. Kinderchor is the school's children's choir. Students are grouped according to age and ability and learn to read music and sing various types of choral music in two, three or four parts. Under the direction of Margo Euler (M.A.T. Harvard U.) they have given many concerts at the conservatory and in the community.

A new program this fall is the winter wind ensemble. The ensemble is for young musicians in grades six thru eight who play brass, woodwind or percussion instruments. Douglas Wauchope, of the Summer Wind Ensemble, will conduct the group and emphasize rapid development of the basics which they will then apply to challenging music. The group will meet on Friday afternoon.

In addition to private lessons, the conservatory offers special adult programs including recorder class, chamber music ensembles and ballet and jazz dance. Evening hours allowing working people a chance to enjoy a lesson or class for a relaxing change of pace. Some special new adult programs include a BSO preview class, symphonic preludes. The class will listen to excerpts from an upcoming BSO concert followed by a lecture/discussion designed to deepen the concert-goers or radio listener's understanding of the masterworks of the symphonic repertoire. James Chubet, of the piano faculty (M.M. New England Conservatory) wil conduct this class.

There will be a special voice class which will teach solfege, sight singing and other vocal skills in a small group. Judy Holmes (London Academy of Music and Dramatic Arts) will give an adult acting class this fall; class will work on character development and use scenes, monologues and acting exercises to reinforce the fundamental relationship of thought to action. The class will also touch upon movement in costume and development of vocal range.

The conservatory is pleased to announce that the jazz/rock department has been expanded under the direction of Jeff Harrington (Berklee College). Ensembles will be formed for intermediate and advanced musicians to teach and perfect improvisational skills in a variety of styles in the jazz/rock idiom.

There will be an ensemble just for rock enthusiasts instructed by Paul Shumsky (B.M. New England Conservatory). He will also teach a class, All About Rock, exploring its evolution from rhythm and blues to contemporary rock styles.

For programs in the conservatory's other branches and further information call 749-7565. The South Shore Conservatory is a member of the National Guild of Community Schools of the Arts and is funded in part by the Mass. Council on the Arts and Humanities.

POLLY ROWE ON CONCERT TOUR OF ITALY

Violinist Polly Rowe daughter of Mrs. H. W. Rowe of Hingham and member of the South Shore Conservatory faculty, is on a concert tour in Italy this summer.

She has been with the Puccini Festival Orchestra since July 10 touring throughout Italy giving performances of operatic, symphonic and chamber orchestra repertoire. Members of the La Scala Opera are performing the operatic repertoire with the orchestra.

When she finishes her engagement with the Puccini Festival Orchestra, she will play at the Teatro Lirico di Spoleto from Sept. 7 to 30 returning to Hingham the beginning of October.

She began her music studies at the South Shore Conservatory in Hingham and later received a full scholarship to the Tanglewood Institute. After her graduation from Hingham High School, she went to Boston University's School for the Arts where she studied violin under Roman Totenberg and received her Bachelor of Music degree. She has continued her violin studies and most recently worked with Sheldon Rotenberg, a long time member of the B.S.O.

In addition to teaching violin, Rowe is a busy free lance musician in the Boston area and is a regular member of the Vermont Symphony Orchestra.

Wheelwright Farm approved

The planning board last week granted final approval to 42 single-family condominium units in the former Wheelwright Farm land.

The development will be built on 22 acres of former farm land off Beechwood Street. The price of the units will range from $200,000 to $250,000. The developer, Jeslyn Co. of Weymouth, had attempted to lower the purchase price upon the request of some planning board members, but said the idea had to be dropped because of the low profit margin.

The larger homes will have two bedrooms, a two-car garage, a full basement and two full baths. All 42 units will share a common septic system . The homes have been styled in a traditional New England custom, according to the developer's representative, and will feature cathedral ceilings in the living-room, a fireplace, floor-to-ceiling bookcases, and clapboard siding.

This is the third cluster development approved by the town since the zoning bylaw was approved three years ago.

No yard sale

A family in Hanover at 59 Barden St. planned and advertised a yard sale in the Mariner this week, in the second section of the paper. A death in the family means that sale of course will not be held.

We put this notice here, at Tuesday's deadline, to alleviate as much traffic for the family as possible. The classified section of the paper is published Monday night, meaning the ad was beyond the reach of the Mariner on Tuesday morning.

Mariner

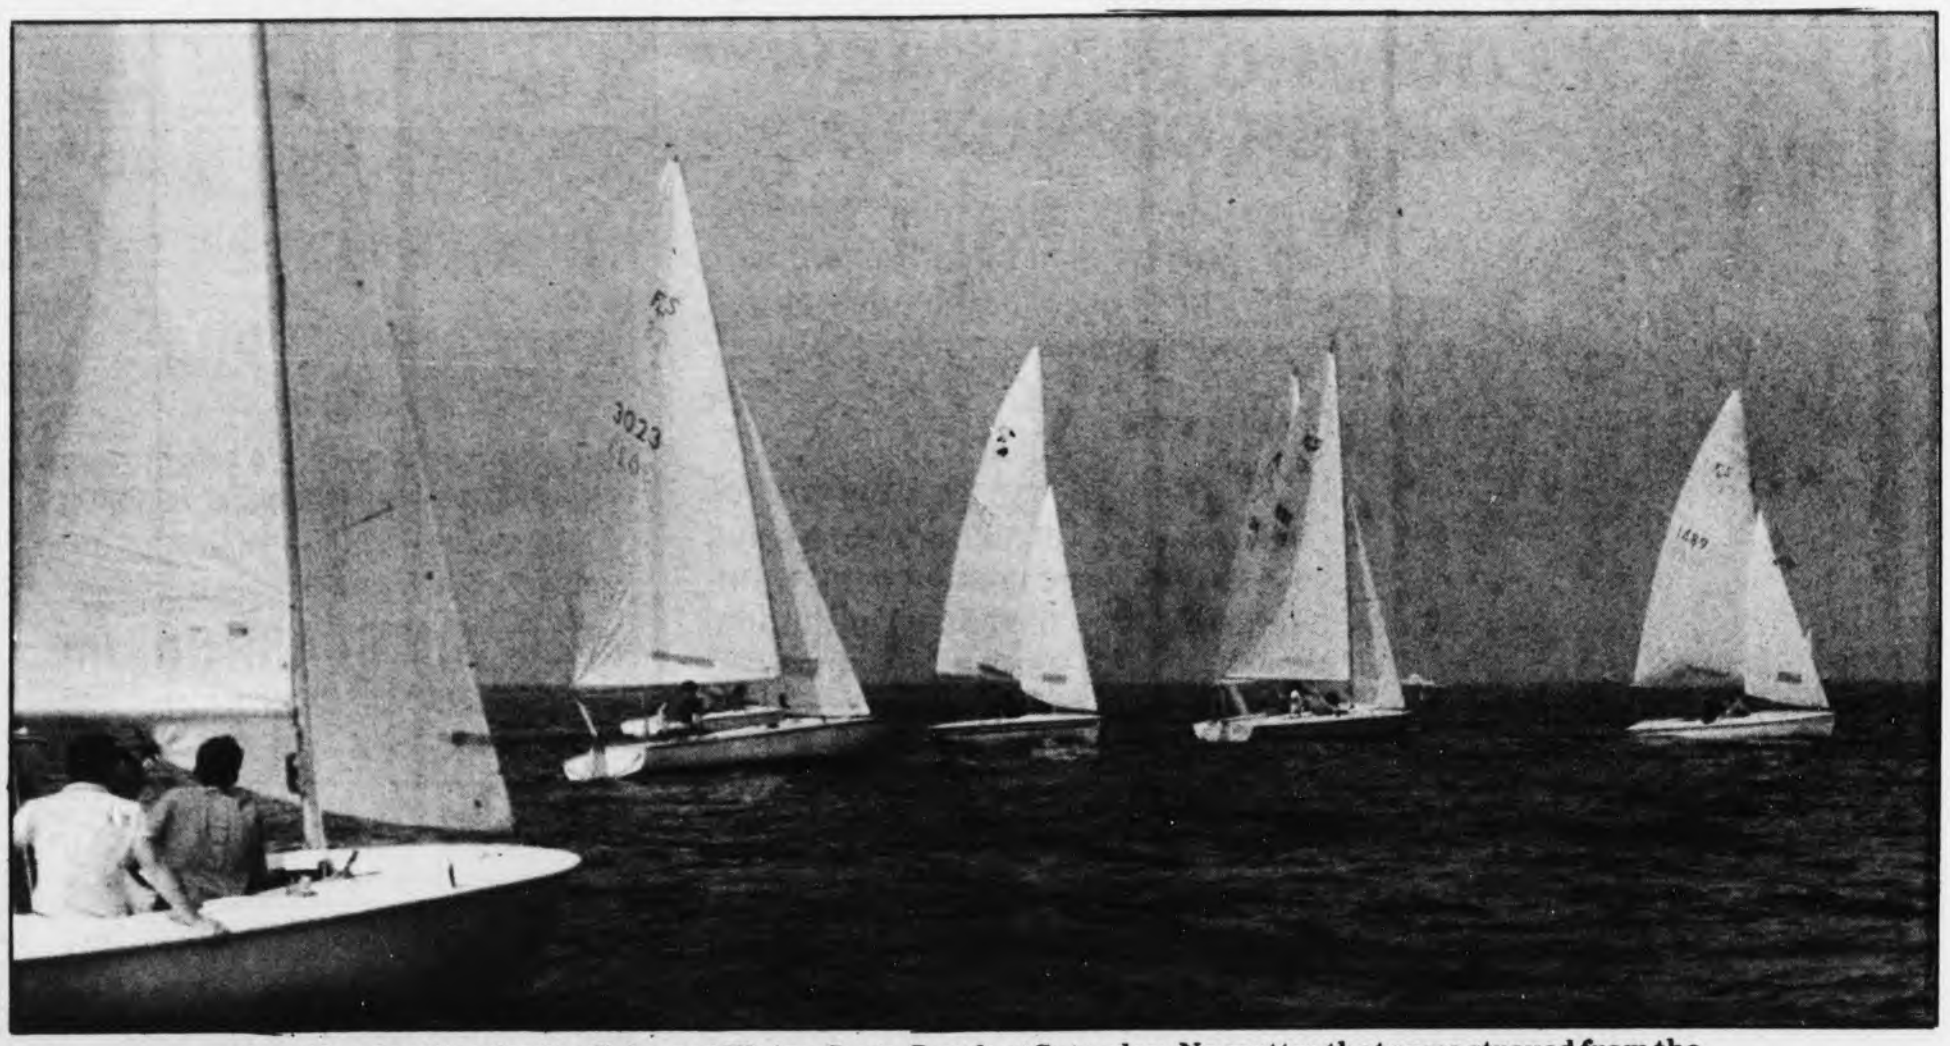
Rushing toward the finish marker are these hearty sailors. The action is fierce, but the atmosphere is friendly, as neighbors compete against each other.



Flying with The Scots

The Flying Scots had an interesting race Saturday. Of the eleven boats that set out on the short triangular course, only three went around the marks in the correct manner. The remaining eight received fourth places.

Peter Chapman along with Jean Baccari finished first, followed by Bob Jackson with his crew, Susan Riley. Rob Henry with Dave Croninger, and Bill Lean picked up a third. (Photos by Carol McCann)

Which way do we go? That was the dominant question posed during last week's scramble for the finish.

It's off and sailing for the Cohasset Flying Scots fleet last Saturday. No matter that some strayed from the course — it was a fine day at the races.

PATCHES — by Lois Martin

From a child's garden of war memories

Why, she wanted to know, were they ringing the church bells about 8? Hiroshima, she was told, because that's the time the bomb fell, 8:15 a.m. Did I, she wondered—hoping that the implication of knowledge wouldn't be an affront to age—did I remember when they dropped the bomb.

Not really. There is not a day or a moment or a time I remember as being the bombing of Hiroshima. But there was an awareness that we'd really done something in Japan. And there's this surprise in my memory when we did it again. I thought we'd done that, and that would be the end. I was sorry we had to do that again. Nagasaki, among the words I spelled early.

But with that train of understanding of those tender years there is no knowledge to go along with it. Some of us were simply born into a war, learned to walk in it, or ride a bicycle in it or started school in it.

It was part of our beginning, coincidental to our becoming. All I knew was that something horrible and important, and if we were lucky, once in a lifetime had happened. Suppertime impressions. Back then you had war with your supper.

More vivid are a couple other memories. My grandfather had died. That was bad enough. It upset everyone terribly. For me he was a wonderful person who was glad to see me and my siblings and whose knee I claimed for a short time.

And close to that upset, I awoke at night to find my parents weren't there. They had to go to a meeting, about blackouts and everything. What's a blackout and everything? Not much to a five year old. What it really is, is that your mother and father aren't home when you wish they were.

Along the coast we kept the shades down. They were special shades. That was done here and where I lived in Ellsworth, Maine. These decades later we debate if the dark of night skulking was more necessary to the sense of participation than to security. But one never knew. Besides there was that German sub that had come up off Hancock Point. No joke there, and a vigilant resident reported it pronto. Coastline communities guarded America.

Because there was a sense of bustle in the war effort, there was little to set the days apart, so natural was the war as an ingredient to them. But VJ Day we stopped everything and rang whatever bells we had.

That was in contrast to the day Roosevelt died. I used to meet my father by habit as he walked home from work. That day in April, 1945 he was so sad. And I asked him why. He said President Roosevelt died. And though I was sorry, I couldn't imagine its impact on my father since he didn't know him. But if I'd been a bit older, I'd have known that they'd been through so much together, my father and the President, and the rest of America. They'd worried and jutted out their chins. They'd put their shoulders to the wheel. Though FDR was mightily shielded by press people who didn't highlight his physical difficulties, no one was unaware of how sick the man was. He didn't look well, for one thing. No fools, Americans. Republicans or Democrats, they knew the man struggled to stay with the war. They were all in it together.

When he died, his courage and pain and his limitations, hidden in life, were highlighted in his death. And part of the sorrow was because he wouldn't have the chance to finish the war to celebrate. He deserved that.

There is no keen memory of denials, gas or sugar. But probably that was the cause of the Sunday afternoon drive's becoming highly valued. Those little luxuries of touring nearby backroads or visiting someone were prized when they were restored.

In later years, I wondered a lot about what my parents knew during the war. So absolute, we know now, was the carnage of the Jews, I was anxious to understand what they had known.

My father said they had heard bits and pieces of what Hitler was doing. But they had no understanding of the measure of the murdering, let alone camps for killing the masses.

In fact, America felt threatened enough with Japan and Germany and involved enough with radio broadcasts of Churchill, Eisenhower, MacArthur and more that its effort was fully consuming. If one couldn't fight, one could roll bandages, or write or pray or buy a War Bond. And if you remember going to movies back then, you know the vintage patriotism that was expressed when our boys landed anywhere back then, under Van Heflin or Spencer Tracy.

There were atrocities everywhere to some degree. Surely we must be given pause by our own Japanese holding camps in America and by our lingering prejudice against people of the origin of our enemy, even if sporadic.

Frankly, I feel the same about the bombing of Hiroshima as I did 40 years ago. It was important. It was horrible and I pray to God it was once in a lifetime.

FROM THE KITCHEN

by JOAN PINKHAM

Cooks who brave the briny deep may tend to mutiny if consigned to the galley while the crew is on deck working up an appetite. The provisions you lug aboard are what you get — no running down to the corner store for milk or the mustard you forgot. Galley cooks used to preparing stove-top meals on one or two burners know that when that cool east wind springs out of nowhere, a pot of hot soup simmering in a large double boiler is always welcome. Mixing together a variety of cans, you can come up with some surprising combinations to serve in plastic themal mugs. Mary Bakke suggest having a variety of soups on board and combining them this way: tomato and cheddar cheese; cream of mushroom and chicken 'n rice; cream of celery and cheddar cheese. For chowders: Manhattan clam and clamato juice, plus a can of minced clams; New England clam, condensed milk and a can of minced clams. That's the easy way, but of course, homemade soups brought on board in a large thermos are best of all. Here is her

CLAM AND WINE BISQUE

1 small onion, finely chopped
1 stalk celery, finely chopped
1 pt. clams with liquor
1/2 stick butter
2 T. flour
2 C. light cream
1 C. dry white wine or sherry

Saute onion and celery in butter, adding flour and stirring until lightly browned. Add clams and juice. Cook over low heat about 8 min. Add cream, heating approx. 5 min. Sprinkle with cayenne pepper.

Who cares about the ants and flies that rally round when food is served out-of-doors? Rather than eat inside when the patio or back yard is so inviting, we gladly share the evening with these pests, but draw the line at letting them within a mile of these

CORN OYSTERS

2 C. fresh, cooked corn, tightly packed
3 eggs, separated
1/4 C. plus 1 T. flour
1/2 tsp. baking powder
1 T. sugar
1 1/2 T. melted butter
1 tsp. salt
1/4 tsp. pepper

Add 3 egg yolks to corn in a large bowl and stir. Sift dry ingredients and add to egg/corn mixture, stirring until blended. Add butter and seasoning. Blend well. Fold stiffly beaten egg whites into egg/corn mixture. Drop by teaspoons onto hot, oiled griddle. Fry until nicely browned on both sides, turning once. Makes 16-20. A spoonful of the batter puffs up like a little oyster when dropped onto the hot griddle.

"Gather ye rosebuds while ye may," is a well-known quote that seems appropriate at this time of year. Rose petals can be used to make potpourris, rose water, sachets and rose hips may be used to make jam. While reading George Abraham's Garden Column in the Globe, I noticed he has this novel suggestion for using rose petals for

ROSE BISCUITS

Using a packaged mix, make a batch of tiny baking powder biscuits. Serve piping hot with:

ROSE BUTTER

Combine layers of rose petals alternating with sweet butter. Store in a covered crock for several days to let the flavor sink in. Spread on biscuits while still hot.

Getting back to corn — choose ears which have fresh green husks. Silk ends should be free of decay and worm damage, while the stem ends should not be too discolored or dry. Kernels should be plump, soft and milky. If you are having a barbecue, here's how to prepare:

CORN ROASTED IN FOIL

Remove husks and silk. Rub ears with butter, salt and pepper. Wrap them individually in foil and bake them at 400 degrees about 15 min., or roast them over hot coals, turning several times. When tender, unwrap and serve at once.

Politicus — by David A. Mittell, Jr.

John Lakian: artisan of his own fate

(first of a two-part series on the result of the Lakian trial.)

As everyone but John Lakian, his wife, and the Pooh-bahs at the Boston Herald understand, the Emperor Lakian has no clothes. His celebrated lawsuit against the Boston Globe has utterly failed to redeem his reputation for telling the truth; in fact the suit has reaffirmed and highlighted the essential truth of Globe reporter Walter Robinson's 1982 assertion of discrepancies between "Lakian's self-portrait and what the record shows."

Lakian did not and does not deserve to be governor, but he does deserve some sympathy. Until he stumbled over his self-portrait, his life represented the fulfillment of the American Dream. Starting out with nothing but his own initiative he had made reams of money in private business, finally buying what is probably the finest home in Westwood. But finding the mere accumulation of wealth insufficiently fulfilling, he went into politics. On the day in 1982 that the Robinson article ran in the Globe, Lakian stood a good chance of winning the Republican gubernatorial nomination over John Sears and Andrew Card. Had he won the nomination he probably would not have been able to defeat Michael Dukakis, but even so his political future would have been bright.

The Robinson piece ended that, and were Robinson's assertions substantially false, Lakian indeed would have had a case for claiming a grievous injury. As it is Lakian may recover to the extent of being a force behind the scenes in politics or even of obtaining a political appointment, but I doubt he is electable.

Although Lakian's injury was self-inflicted (Robinson merely reported discrepancies as he found them), Lakian's behavior was not heinous nor is it uncommon in private conversation. How often do folks chatting with friends over cocktails, or sitting next to strangers on trains, embellish their personal histories or sanitize their private Hells? That's all Lakian did, only he did it in public and on the record and as a candidate for the highest office in the Commonwealth. A rookie in politics, he failed to understand that in the public snake-pit he was entering, his life would be put under a microscope "like the water in an urinal," as Shakespeare put it about one of the Two Gentlemen of Verona.

In such an unmerciful public snake-pit, total candor is no guarantee against public injury. For example, since he entered politics in 1962, Mike Dukakis has let his life be pretty much an open book, yet he as had to endure public criticism of his character, especially of the alleged personal defects that resulted in his great defeat of 1978. But despite this and other public ordeals, Dukakis' strategy is the only viable one for darn fools who fancy themselves pursuing a career in politics. Such fools have to understand from the outset that if they ever did anything dumb in their lives the public must hear about it early from them rather than later from their enemies. The pity in Lakian's case is that the first dumb thing he seems to have done was the embellished retelling of the story of a rather smart life.

Lakian's blunder, therefore, would appear to be motivated mainly be insecurity. His personal achievements, outstanding by any measure for a 39-year-old, apparently were not enough to convince his heart of hearts that the lack of a Harvard education did not compromise him as a man and as a candidate. Therefore he invented a Harvard education, an invention that sadly did compromise him both as a man and as a candidate.

What is equally sad is the spactacle of Lakian grinning and proclaiming a court victory, and, as it would appear, preparing to run for office again, when in all but one of the particulars of his lawsuit an impartial jury found against him. It hardly needs to be said that the Republican Party will not need the "baggage" this man now carries in its future uphill struggles to win statewide office for the first time since 1972.

A couple of millenia ago a Roman historian named Sallust wrote that "each is the artisan of his own fate," and I don't believe anyone since has come closer to describing the relationship between man and his destiny. Sallust would disagree with Freudians who see nearly every misfortune in a life as created by individual psychology. In Sallust's concept there is constant interplay between the individual, his tools, and his choices, with the external forces (i.e. Boston Globe reporters) which Shakespeare called "the slings and arrows of outrageous fortune."

Since the moment the Globe article about him appeared in1982, Lakian has denied any role whatever as "artisan of his own fate," and has put all the blame on the terrible Globe. It was precisely this rather unmanly (but human) response to his initial blunder that engendered the second blunder of the lawsuit, which, sadly has only served to bury the Lakian political career deeper.

What is perhaps saddest about these compounded blunders is that insofar as I am aware there was nothing whatever about the life of John Lakian that he needed to cover up or be ashamed of. His rise was spectacular whether his father died in World War II or in a trolley accident. His own war record was admirable without the embellishment of a "battlefield commission." And surely the Lakian record didn't need the word "Harvard" attached to it to achieve legitimacy.

That one Armenian-American with a fine record trying to make it in Massachusetts and Republican politics apparently believed himself incomplete without the Harvard label should be a lesson to us in more than one man's social insecurity. In large measure John Lakian's attitude toward his resume mirrors a society that is still too stratified and still too populated with "old boy" networks. I would argue that Derek Bok's self-satisfied Harvard loses ground nearly every week to John Silber's aggressive, dynamic Boston University. But because as a society we live by the notion that Harvard is a sacred cod of glory and influence, an outstanding Boston University graduate like John Lakian can feel insecure enough to make up a Harvard connection.

Lakian, like all of us, owns his own blunders, and he must see them as such before he can begin to hope to move forward in life. It was his failure to know the first blunder of the fanciful resume that led to the second blunder of the lawsuit.

Nevertheless, Lakian's blunders should be seen in the context of an American Dream that in this part of the country isn't yet open to all. There is no other part of the country where anyone would give much of a damn where a person went to school. In Omaha they want to know what a person can do as evidenced by what he has done for the last five years, and that's all they want to know. That is the American Dream in action. Here, sadly, and too often, the American Dream only works if you have a ticket to get in.

That's still the climate here, a climate we need to change.

(Next week: Is The Globe fair?)
